Fast-paced Shipshewana auction offers something for everyone

By Karin Milliman

SHIPSHEWANA, Ind. — Shipshewana is widely known for its Wednesday auction setup. Held year-round, the weather never stops the commotion at 9 a.m. inside the auction building. Sellers can rent a spot, bring in their items, and have them sold. With sellers offering such a wide range of items, there's something for everyone if you are willing to walk a bit and take the time to check out what is there.

One seller may have vintage toys, while the next space has clothing and household furniture. Walk a bit further and find some jewelry or maybe some car parts or advertising pieces. Half the fun is not knowing what will be there when you get there. So come a little early and plan to spend time going through the individual seller spaces. When you find something you like, hang right there because when they start selling, it isn't just one auctioneer. Several auctioneers start selling when the bell rings. Some are side by side, others are a bit further down the line, so you have to pay attention to the one you are trying to follow. Auctioneer Al DeLagrange is an old hand at this routine. He's been at it for years. He said things are picking up now and he loves what he does.

Left: Hanging from a lollipop frame, this oil charge service station sign brought in a high bid of $700.

I believe the item attracting the most attention during a recent sale was a huge fish. Getting in to selling at this booth, the auctioneer announced, "Let's get in to heavy metal." The crowd chuckled as the huge fish came up for bid. This fish was over 6 feet tall and around 10 feet long. It was made of metal mesh and solid metal pieces. The mouth was wide open, and the crowd laughed when the auctioneer asked what kind of fish it was. The seller joked that if you owned a fish that large, it could be any kind you wanted. It was finally

This fish was popular with the bidders and sold for $800.

Right: A visible gasoline pump sold for $325.

Tea towels with witches can fly into collector's kitchen

By Larry LeMasters

Since the 1950s, Halloween tea towels have decorated kitchens all over America during October. Tea towels are also called kitchen towels, dishtowels, and hand towels, but the historical name for all of these towels is tea towels.

Tea towels were invented in the 17th century in England. Victorian English women used these towels for delicate house chores, such as drying expensive tea sets without leaving scratches on the porcelain and to keep breakage to a minimum. While these towels were used for a variety of tasks, the teacup and saucer-drying chore gave the towel its name—tea towel.

The earliest tea towels were made of linen because they would not scratch delicate china or crystal services. These towels also became canvases for beautiful art work, making them decopronounced sold at $800, and although the seller was reluctant, he nodded to let it go. The seller made many items from "junk," soldering and welding things together to create art. Then he took them to shows and set up to sell. He had some unique pieces. He made a pistol that sold for $80. He made all of these by hand, using junk like bicycle chains, old pieces of metal, an old wrench, a spark plug, and anything else he could find to incorporate into his art.

This same seller also had a visible gasoline pump at the end of his items. Its price rose rapidly until it was hammered "sold" at a bid of $325. A long piece of braided rope looked heavy enough to anchor just about anything you needed to keep in one place. It sold for $80, and the new owner just dragged it out of the way.

An old service station sign on a lollipop stand went up for auction. The dealership was offering up oil changes and tune-ups on this black sign with white lettering. It sold for $700.

A perfect piece of leaded glass was offered up. It had a beautiful pattern, and nothing was wrong with it. The final bid of $145 would let someone use it to send designs across the room when the sun hit it from different angles.

Two dough bowls sold. The first was large enough that the auctioneer joked it could be used as a bathtub. It was in great shape and sold for $95. Interestingly enough, the second dough bowl was much smaller and in rougher shape. It sold for an impressive $155.

A long, antique-looking table was painted green. It was used, which added to its unique look. It looked like many meals had been eaten around this table, and it had plenty of room for everyone to find a seat. It sold for $325.

A sign advertising Heleman's beer sold at $95. The auctioneer sold a table of six duck decoys as one lot. The final bid price on these distraction ducks was $210.

The Trading Place auction and flea market happens every Wednesday and starts promptly at 9 a.m. For more information visit www.shipshewanatradingplace.com.

Above: A brewing advertising sign from Heleman, this sign sold for $95.

Above: In rough shape, this small dough bowl still brought in a nice bid of $155.

Above: Sitting a bit closer to the floor than most tables, this long green one sold for $325.

Tea towels

rative as well as utilitarian.

Tea towels soon became a kitchen staple for rich and middle class families. In fact in just a few short years, historically speaking, these towels went from wealthy status symbol items to everyday necessities as the chore of keeping a kitchen clean increased.

Although the terms "dish towel" and "tea towel" are often used interchangeably, there are minor differences in the two towels. Tea towels are crafted from linen or cotton and tend to be thinner than the average dishtowel. Dishtowels are often crafted from terry cloth and serve to dry all the dishes used in the kitchen rather than just expensive tea sets. Terry cloth is much more absorbent than linen, but as soft as terry cloth is, it tends to scratch delicate china ups.

Tea towels never lost their decorative flair, and when they crossed the sea to America, American housewives quickly began decorating their kitchens with tea towels that reflected the seasons, such as Easter, 4th of July, Halloween, and Christmas. Christmas tea or dish towels grew to be the most used decorative kitchen towel, but Halloween tea towels best reflect the eerie season they symbolize, and the images attract the imaginations of the entire family, including children who are often given the task of drying the dishes.

In the 20th century, American women often made tea towels out of tightly woven cotton flour sacks that held flour and sugar when they could not afford to purchase the towels. Even these poorly made tea towels were embroidered and decorated. Collectors love to find these nearly 100-year-old towels.

Tea towels as kitchen decorations hit their heyday in the last 30 years or so as manufacturing processes improved and towels, in general, became cheaper and more accessible to all families. The love of seasonal decoration has never ended. In fact, today people often use tea towels to gift wrap presents so the wrapping becomes as much a part of the gift as the gift itself, especially if the gift happens to be baked goods or cheeses. Tea towels, especially spooky Halloween towels often double as placemats or even napkins, adding both seasonal color and scary imagery to your table fare.

As the 21st century rolled around, dishtowels or tea towels rose to new popularity. Tea towels have gained a new outlook on life as decorating with seasonal tea towels has taken on a kind of wealthy popularity again. Movie stars, such as Gwyneth Paltrow, have been featured in magazines such as Bon Appetit, describing their tea towels as "standouts in the kitchen." Seeing popular entertainers savor tea towels has led many to decorate their kitchens with them.

Above: New, Cynthia Rowley set of three "Witch Cupboard" Halloween kitchen towels. This set was offered on eBay for $35.

Today, collectors strive to not only collect but to decorate using seasonal tea towels. Halloween tea towels include images of ghosts, black cats, pumpkins, jack-o-lanterns, and witches. Witch imagery remains the strongest and most sought after Halloween imagery on any Halloween collectible, including tea towels.

The stereotype imagery of witches that is prevalent in Halloween tea towels today can be traced back as far as the 11th century. Collectors of witch tea towels continue to bring witches into their homes.

History will come alive at Nov. 14 Early American History Auction

Early American History Auctions presents 225 historic items in its Nov. 14 auction. With values from a few hundred dollars to five figures, there is something for every collector.

Autographs and documents include an August 5, 1773 George Washington signed to Robert Cary & Company mentioning John Parke Custis, published in "The Papers of George Washington"; an 1835 U.S. Patent signed by President Andrew Jackson; an 1881 Washington, D.C. deed signed by Frederick Douglass; Rear Admiral David G. Farragut's 1863 letter on USS Monongahela ordnance and Henry Dearborn's 1801 approval of pay for an express rider to Mount Vernon, likely carrying President Jefferson's offer of the Saint Domingue consulship to Tobias Lear.

There is an 1803 document signed by Caleb Gibbs, first commander of Washington's Life Guard, for transporting Paul Revere's copper bolts to the Charlestown Navy Yard, most likely for the USS Constitution; a receipt on the letterhead of Baltimore's Indian Queen Tavern, Francis Scott Key's residence during the 1812 bombardment; Vermont founder Ira Allen's 1771 promissory note; an 1822 Russian bond signed by Nathan Mayer Rothschild; John Philip Sousa's 1925 autographed bar of "The Stars and Stripes Forever"; a 1933 Orville Wright signed check; three signed World War II-era original pencil cartoons by E.H. Shepard, illustrator of Winnie-the-Pooh; and a certified blood-stained upholstery piece from the November 22, 1963 John F. Kennedy assassination limousine.

The German government has accepted the drastic armistice terms imposed by the Allies and the United States. The greatest war in history, which has involved more than half the world and has continued for more than four years at a cost of millions of lives and billions in treasure, is at an end. This news was flashed to eagerly waiting people in all parts of the earth today in the following Associated Press bulletin:

Above: Dated Nov. 11, 1918 this paper announces the end of World War I.

Colonial and Revolutionary War currency includes a high-grade offering led by the finest certified 1777 Delaware Nine Pence (PCGS Superb Gem Unc-67 PPQ) and One Shilling (PCGS Superb Gem Unc-68 PPQ); two Paul Revere-engraved 1775 Massachusetts "Sword in Hand" notes, including the finest certified Seventeen Shillings (PMG EF-40); a 1771 North Carolina Ten Shillings (PCGS Superb Gem New-68 PPQ); a 1773 Pennsylvania Fifty Shillings (PCGS Gem Unc-65 EPQ); a 1786 Rhode Island Six Pence (PASSCO Superb Gem 68, jumbo margins); and choice notes from Maryland, New Hampshire, New Jersey and New York.

Wilhelm Schimmel carved American eagle with 17-inch wingspan and 9.5 inches tall.

Iron cannonballs recovered from the Continental gunboat "Philadelphia," sunk at Valcour Island in 1776 will be offered as well as an October 1775 Massachusetts Council commission signed by 15 members, bearing the new Paul Revere-made seal with the King's name removed; Parliament's 1775 "Restraining Act"; a 1775 New Hampshire Provincial Congress broadside; a 1779 Gentleman's Magazine with a firsthand account of Bonhomme Richard vs. HMS Serapis; and the 1779 London silver snuff box of David Cobb, Washington's aide-de-camp, with a family archive for provenance.

The first published Edward Savage engraved portrait of Washington is another featured item. An 1845 letter to John Augustine Washington III from Mount Vernon's slave overseer; President Madison's 1809 broadside proclamation repealing the Embargo Act; and an 1860 beardless Abraham Lincoln photograph will also draw interest.

Civil War, Black History, Art & Americana will include hand-drawn Chancellorsville battle maps marking where "Stonewall" Jackson was wounded; J.E.B. Stuart's June 1863 telegram inviting Confederate women to his Cavalry Review; a rare (R-8, 5–10 known) F. Buhl & Co. encased postage stamp; a mammoth 1865 John Brown lithograph; an 18th-century slave ankle bracelet; a circa 1840s manuscript poem, "Freedom to the Slave"; a circa 1800 Michele Felice Cornè oil painting of the armed merchant ship "Mount Vernon"; a Wilhelm Schimmel carved American eagle; an Annie Oakley-design target ball; Hondius's circa 1625 map of Virginia and Florida; and much more.

The auction is now open for viewing, registration and absentee bidding at www.EarlyAmerican.com. With values from a few hundred dollars to five figures, there is something for every collector. Bidding directly on Early American's website saves 5 percent over third-party platforms.
