Sinclair porcelain sign pumped up a $12,100 bid

BY PETE PRUNKL

WOLCOTTEVILLE, Ind. — Richard Cripe (1932-2019) was that unique high school shop teacher who could fix your car and your outlook on life. His dual master's degree in industrial arts and counseling qualified him for both types

"We reached out to Sinclair and petroliana collectors," said auctioneer and owner Michael Strawser. Outreach brought results. Two days before the sale, several high dollar lots that Strawser saved for the end of the 376-lot sale, had already exceed-

Griffith milk glass spiced up the kitchen

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Enoch L. Griffith founded Griffith Laboratories in 1918. Griffith, a former bakery supplies salesman, specialized in bakery supplies, including his first successful product — Aquatex. Aquatex was a gelatinized starch sold to bakeries around America.

When the Great Depression hit, Griffith searched for ways to keep Griffith Laboratories profitable. Seeking "household name" status, Griffith decided to begin producing beautifully designed milk glass spice jars. Each jar was filled with a high-quality spice. Griffith used special production methods to guarantee the spices were sanitary, labeling many of the jars "Purified." The jars were refillable and reusable for many other items. Griffith reasoned that most housewives had to buy spices, so why not offer spices in distinctive Art Deco milk glass jars? Housewives loved the jars and Griffith Laboratories, just as Griffith wanted, became a household name.

From the 1930s until the 1950s, Griffith milk glass spice jars added glamour to kitchens across America. During the Depression and War years, housewives were on strict budgets, but Griffith milk glass spice jars rose in popularity since they offered beauty with functionality, all at an affordable price.

spice jars were not sold individually (although they are sold separately on today's secondary markets, usually averaging $5-8 each). Griffith sold all jars in sets of 8, 12, 16, 18, 22, or 24. The earliest sets, during the 1930s, were sold with their own metal stands, which would hold all the jars in the set purchased. During the war years of the early 1940s, metal stands were replaced with plastic stands as all metal in the United States went to war production. Following World War II, Griffith spice jar stands were once again made of metal. In the 1950s, when wooden wall mounted items, such as shadow boxes, became popular, Griffith sold spice sets in wooden, wall-mounted cabinets with glass doors. While wooden cabinets complimented the décor of most '50s homes, collectors prefer the metal stands when displaying Griffith milk glass spice jars. Complete sets of these spice jars with original stands sell for as much as $200 today.

were white; although, milk glass (thought of as a milky-white glass only) comes in pink, blue, green, purple, brown, and other colors. Milk glass is characterized by its creamy, thick, milky texture. Milk glass possesses a beautiful elegance to it, and this glass is often used for a purely decorative purposes.

All of Griffith's milk glass spice jars are clearly labeled "Griffith's" on a distinctive Art Deco, attractive vertical label that runs down the front of the jar. The earliest jars had molded labels while the later jars had paper labels, so the type of label is an easy field test to “date” a Griffith milk glass spice jar. Missing paper labels makes positive identification that the jar is a Griffith difficult. There was also a paper label on the back of a Griffith’s spice jar, offering women suggestions on how to use the spice inside the jar. One distinctive feature of Griffith’s milk glass spice jars was the variety of lids that came with the jars. Griffith wanted different women, with different kitchen colors, to purchase Griffith’s spice jars, so the jar sets were manufactured with a palette of different colored jar lids, including green, pink, yellow, red, black, and other colors. Most of the spice stands or racks were painted to match the jar lids, making them color coordinated. Collectors like the fact that original metal lids may be replaced with modern plastic lids found on most grocery store spice jars, making it possible to utilize old jars that no longer have lids. Below: Beautiful set of Griffith spice jars with blue lids. This 12-jar set is valued at $75.

Rookwood sells one last time at Humler & Nolan

SUSAN EMERSON NUTTER

CINCINNATI, Ohio - As the hammer fell for the last lot during Humler & Nolan’s final sale; Rookwood XXX held June 20-21, Riley Humler felt a sense of satisfaction that the sale was a success. “The market for what we sell has been soft for some time,”

Humler noted. “But this final sale had some really good pieces, and sale results exceeded my expectations which was nice to experience.”

Though Rookwood usually takes center stage at these Humler & Nolan events, a piece of Weller garnered its share of appreciative attention. “That Weller vase was something,” Humler states. “I am very happy it did so well.”

Estimated to bring $12,000 to $15,000, but selling for $20,500 was the monumental Weller Eocean vase made for the 1904 St. Louis World’s Fair and originally purchased by brewing icon, Adolphus Busch (1839-1913). Standing an impressive 25

1/8 inches high, the artist-signed vase painted by Albert Haubrich was decorated with fuschsia colored lilies on a mauve ground.

Equally as interesting is the back story of the top Rookwood lot of the Rookwood XXX auction; the monumental Rookwood Iris glaze vase decorated with white Easter lilies; the work of Carl Schmidt. Painted in 1910, the lilies encircle the body of the 20½ inch high vase which sold for $20,500. The company logo, the date, shape Right: This monumental Rookwood Iris glaze vase with white Easter Lilies painted in 1910 by Carl Schmidt introduced the Antiques Roadshow audience to Riley Humler in 1997 when he appraised it during their Cincinnati show. Standing 20 ½ inches tall, the vase which sold for $20,500 features beautifully crafted lilies which encircle the body.

number 907A; an incised W for white (Iris) glaze, two illegible oval paper labels, and Schmidt’s impressed monogram added it this piece’s appeal.

But equally as attractive is the vase’s personal association with Riley Humler. “In May of 1997, I was asked to be an appraiser on Antiques Roadshow which was coming to Cincinnati in June,” Humler said. “Late on that day, a nice fellow pulling a red wagon fitted out with a large beer cooler approached the Pottery and Porcelain table. When he opened the cooler, out came one of the most beautiful Rookwood vases I had ever seen. I went on to appraise it for between $40,000 and $60,000 which at the time was a reasonable figure and the vase.

No phone or absentee bidders participated, but there were 150 highly competitive onsite bidders in the Strawser gallery. LiveAuctioneers supplied a whopping 620 registered bidders.

The top lot of the sale was a two-sided 36-inch diameter Sinclair porcelain sign with frame. The near mint condition sign sold to a floor bidder for $12,100. Only one bidder on Liveauctioneers joined the chase. Selling prices for lots that sold onsite include a 10 percent buyer's premium. For everything purchased on LiveAuctioneer, the premium was 18 percent.

The top oil can was a 5-gallon Sinclair Opaline rocker can in pristine condition. The circa 1930 14 1/2 inch diameter can with intact cap and rocker base sold to an internet bidder for $2,006. The top gas pump was a Sinclair 10-gallon visible pump manufactured by Fry during the 1920s. The pump sold to a floor bidder for $3,850.

Even Sinclair attendant caps were in demand. Internet and floor bidders jockeyed for the lead in a race that started at $15 and ended at $330 for a black and white cap with a Sinclair logo.

Non-Sinclair items also did well. The top vehicle was a 1953 military equipped Willys Jeep that induced a battle between an internet bidder and an equally determined onsite competitor. The floor bidder prevailed at $8,800. The second and third best vehicles were Fords in good running condition. A 1930 Model A two-door coupe went to a floor bidder for $7,700 and an internet bidder bought the 1926 Model T for $7,080.

A 1908 Michigan leather license tag with leather straps and brass tag sold to a bidder on Liveauctioneers for $1,888.

Eleven days after the petroliana sale, the Strawser team traveled to Dick Cripe's hometown of Centerville, Mich., to disperse his personal effects and the Victorian house he
