Frog bank leaps to $625 bid at Stony Ridge

By William Flood

TOLEDO, Ohio — Ohio's Stony Ridge Auction hosted a superb sale that included more than 400 lots of primitives, mercantile items, native-American pieces, cast-iron banks, 19th-century children's items, and Civil War antiques.

Operating from their "antique" digs (the circa 1926 Lemoyne School) near Toledo, the company held the event online through LiveAuctioneers but allowed restricted in-person previewing and by-appointment pickup.

Prices realized were strong, with half of the 400-plus lots selling for three-figure and four-figure sums. The auction's highest price, coming in at $3,000 and nearly 10 times pre-bid estimates, was for a circa 1830-1840 canvas family portrait attributed to Vermont painter Sheldon Peck (1797-1868). Peck was an itinerant and self-taught portrait and furniture painter. His signature decorative motif — one long stroke flanked by two shorter ones, resembling a rabbit track —appeared on this piece on the background and on the mother's clothing. The painting was restored and attributed to Peck in 1967 by William H. Pillsworth.

The auction's next highest and slightly over pre-bid estimate at $2,600, was for a late 18th to early 19th-century Northeast Woodland Indians 11-inch ash burl bowl. The hand-scraped piece still retained much of its original pigment and grain. The auction's third-ranking bid at $1,250, nearly double its expected high bid, went for a tiger maple child's chest of drawers (not a full-size one, mind you, but a miniature!). It featured molded maple drawers, inlaid posts, and brass drawer pulls and dated 1847. Two other items surpassed the 4-figure mark including a 9-inch American Indian burl scoop with no detected issues which grabbed $1,050 and a 10-inch blue Shaker oval pantry box getting the same amount.

Stunning pieces — both hand-crafted and manufactured — were available across the entire auction. For $925, a lucky buyer took home a working-condition, circa 1932 Art

Bailey planes still smooth the way for collectors

By Larry LeMasters

Leonard Bailey (1825–1905) is credited with designing and building the first modern bench plane. Originally working for his company (Bailey, Chaney & Company), he later worked for Stanley Rule and Level Company. Bailey, who started out as a cabinetmaker before becoming a toolmaker in Boston, patented several wood planes and plane features, and his designs became industry standards for most wood planes manufactured after 1870.

Left: This Leonard Bailey "Victor" plane, circa 1885, is truly beautiful to look at. It is valued at $500 in working condition with good patina on its nickel plate.

Wood bench planes are hand-held tools used for shaping wood. Muscle power forces the plane's cutting blade over a wood surface, removing a pre-determined amount of uniform, wood shavings. Nearly all hand planes are used to flatten, reduce the thickness of, or give a smooth surface to a rough piece of lumber. Hand-held bench planes consist of a cutting edge, such as a sharpened metal plate, attached to a firm body. The cutting blade, which extends below the bottom of the plane's body surface (called a "sole"), slices off shavings of wood. A large, flat sole guides the cutter blade to remove only the highest parts of the rough wood surface. After several passes with a plane, the surface of the wood is rendered flat and smooth.

While Bailey perfected the hand plane, he did not invent it. Hand planes are ancient tools, originating thousands of years ago. The earliest known examples of a woodworking hand plane were found in Pompeii, but other Roman-era hand planes have been found in Germany and Britain. Whether or not wood planes predate ancient Rome has not been proven, but it is highly possible that hand planes originated in ancient Egypt.

Above: Leonard Bailey's patented "Compass Wood Plane," circa 1862, that is still in working condition and valued at $250.

Roman planes resembled the modern planes that Leonard Bailey produced. Roman hand planes were manufactured with iron wrapped around a wooden frame and an iron blade secured with a wedge.

Early plane frames were usually made from wood with a rectangular slot cut across the center of the frame. The cutting blade was held in place with a wooden wedge, which was tapped into the slot. Planes such as these were popular during the Middle Ages in Europe and Asia.

Leonard Bailey's first plane patent, in 1855, describes a scraper plane with an adjustable cutter. The cutting blade was mounted on a plate that pivoted

Deco Little Duke slot machine. The one-cent, three-wheel machine featured an O. D. Jennings & Company hand-painted wood and aluminum case. Folk art lovers competed over a 19th-century carved wood head attributed to Abram Cook (1837-1921), taking it to $725. A stunning eagle-motif bracelet in brushed blue and red turquoise, one of 11 lots of Native American silver jewelry, handily grabbed $250.

Bidders seeking traditional antiques had plenty of options, including furniture and home decor items. Available to Civil War buffs was a picture frame shrouded in Civil War memorabilia housing the promotional papers for 1st Sergeant for soldier Andrew Van Buren of South Carolina. It commanded $400. Perfect for outfitting someone's living room was a mercantile store coffee bin, stenciled E.P. Co. Findlay Ohio, and advertising Jersey Coffee; it sold for $325. For the home office was an antique yellow pine 24-drawer filing cabinet. It was acquired for $275.

Toy collectors had a plethora of items to pursue including an early to mid-19th-century Noah's Ark with 18 animals in various conditions, with glass eyes, wood or composition bodies, and several hand-painted. After 19 bids, the gavel went down on that at $925. A rare 1930s Jug-O-Rum push-lever frog mechanical bank sold for $625. The good-condition piece sporting its original paint was designed by M. Elizabeth Cook, one of only five of a series produced by the Kilgore Manufacturing Company of Ohio. Equally impressive, going for $400, was a 15-inch Wilkins cast-iron City of New York paddle wheeler with its original enameled paint.

Above: This working-condition Art Deco era Little Duke slot machine went for $925

For those seeking small collectibles, 19 lots of souvenir spoons, mainly city and state commemoratives were on the block. High bids ranged from $40 for a set of seven featuring children's characters like Woody Woodpecker and Tony the Tiger to $275 for a set of 15 sterling pieces weighing in at 361 grams.

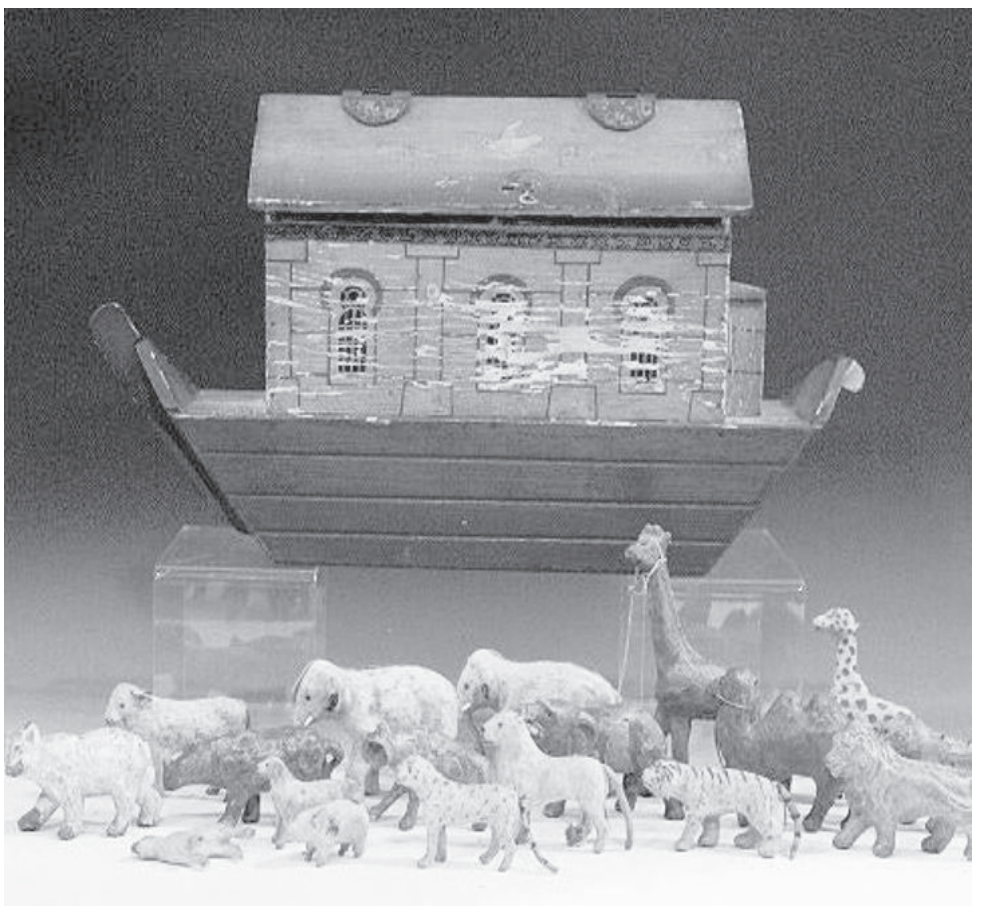
Above: Perhaps 300 years old, this Woodland Indian bowl ($2,600) still retained much of its original pigment.

Below: Demonstrating that real antiques are still popular, this oval Shaker pantry box went for $1,050.



Above: Plenty of antique toys were available, like this 19th-century Noah's Ark set that sold for $925.

Below: This side wheel riverboat ($400) was made by Wilkins Toy Company of New Hampshire, famous for its cast-iron carriages.

Below: This folk art carved wood head ($725) was hand-made Abram Cook who trained as a carpenter.

Below: This eagle motif cuff featuring crushed red and blue turquoise sold for $250.

Dusty typewriter turns buyer into passionate collector

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — He's only 42, but handyman Kirk Jackson has always been an old-school guy who loves old stuff.

He collects old oil lamps and old coins. He fixes and preserves old furniture and old machines. He uses roller and hand brushes instead of spray guns to paint houses. He keeps his broken-down 1980 Jeep parked next to his work shed because he likes to look at it.

So it was natural four years ago that he was drawn to an old, dirty case in the Dead People's Things antique store in Goodlettsville during a shopping trip.

Jackson hoped it was an old record player, but when he opened the case, a filthy 1954 Remington manual typewriter was inside. The keys still worked though.

"It was intrigue at first sight," he said.

Jackson got the store owner to come down from $50 to $35 on the price. He brought home his new-old typewriter, blew away dust and dirt with an air compressor, tapped out some sentences and made a bunch of typing mistakes.

After a few paragraphs, something clicked for Jackson.

He started buying manual typewriters. He taught himself how to repair them. He scoured the internet for parts, and he joined online groups of manual typewriter enthusiasts and collectors.

He started selling some typewriters that he has cleaned up and fixed. He started repairing other people's typewriters. He launched his Nashville Typewriter company and Instagram page.

He has more than 220 manual typewriters scattered all over his house and in his work shed.

"I can't deny there's an obsession with it. There absolutely is," he said, shrugging. "I'm not apologetic for it."

Jackson said he has fallen in love with the purity of writing on a manual typewriter. No autocorrect. No internet notifications or other distractions popping up on a laptop screen. No news alerts.

Just you, your typewriter, your ideas and the music that's made with the clacking of the keys.

"It's a very visceral and passionate experience for me," he said. "It puts me in a different place than any other writing."

Jackson now feels he has a duty to preserve the manual typewriter so others can feel that same connection to writing.

"I don't want these things to die, man. They're not making these things anymore. It's a beautiful part of our history."

After some initial hesitation — the machines seemed to be taking over their house — Jackson's wife and teen son are on board.

"He has a heart of gold and a vision. ... He has a gift he wants to share with the world, and the typewriter happens to be his instrument of choice, no different than a pianist or guitarist or any artist, really," said his wife, Kimberly

To that end, Jackson said he tries to keep prices low. To clean and restore old typewriters, Jackson charges $75 to $100, and an additional $25 an hour if the job's complicated.

The most expensive typewriter he restored and sold for $535 is a 1952 Olympia SM3 that types in cursive.

He sometimes gives away typewriters or fixes them for others for free.

"It's a passion thing," his wife said. "It's more to help somebody than it is about making a sale or getting paid to do it. For him, it's more about love and to help other people get a functioning typewriter."

Joshua Tauber joins Morphy's as lamp consultant

DENVER, Pa. – Dan Morphy, president and founder of Morphy Auctions, has announced the appointment of Dr. Joshua Tauber as Antique Lamps & Lighting Consultant. Tauber joined the company's Fine & Decorative Arts Division and assumed his new post on Aug. 18.

A native of Morristown, N.J., Tauber is a physician who works in the field of addiction medicine. He is also a lifelong antiques aficionado who was introduced to collecting as a child by his father, Marc Tauber, a prominent dealer of vintage European sports cars. Josh, as he known to his many friends in the antiques trade, spent his formative years attending shows and auctions with his family, where he says he gained "a priceless education about antiques."

Tauber graduated from medical school in Phoenix, Ariz., the city where he currently resides. Although he forged a successful career in medicine, he says his love of antiques "has never taken a back seat." He and his fiancée own and operate an antiques store in Phoenix that is well known for its array of early 20th-century lighting and decorative arts of the Art Nouveau period.

When Josh learned of a possible opening in the Decorative Arts Division at Morphy Auctions, he contacted an old friend and fellow classmate who happened to work at Morphy's in the Firearms Division. In short time, Josh was on a plane headed to Pennsylvania to meet with Dan Morphy and discuss the possibility of joining Morphy's team.

"I immediately hit it off with Dan," Tauber said. "It was really important to me to work with someone who was motivated by their passion for antiques, just as I am. It was clear to me that Dan and I had that in common. Most people would look at a doctor who wanted to work for an auction house like they were crazy, but Dan totally got it. He didn't question it at all. His father, Dr. John Morphy, is also a physician

Compacts bring beauty to the collector

By Melody Amsel-Arieli

Compacts, portable vanity cases, typically containing mirror, face powder, and puffs, were popular from the early 1900s through the 1950s. Simple or swanky, all reflect women's eternal quest for beauty.

Wealthy Egyptians stored cosmetic oils, unguents, powdered minerals and kohl in luxurious glass, obsidian, or alabaster jars. Greeks kept theirs in wide-mouthed or narrow-bodied vessels. Upper-class Roman women stored kohl in decorative, double-tubed flasks , and their beeswax creams and lead-based whiteners in decorative glass, gold, or bone containers.

During the Middle Ages, women who enhanced their natural appearance were considered immoral. Yet some evidently brightened their faces and rouged their cheeks. Though the clergy continued to rage against "painted ladies," 18th-century French beauties may have tucked bits of powder or rouge in their finger-rings for hush-hush touchups while out and about. Within a century, however, European attitudes towards cosmetic facial embellishments began to change.

Through the 1850s, some women smoothed their complexions or hid freckles with pastes or whitening powders purchased at apothecary shops. Others, more discreet, created lamp-black mascara, beeswax pomades, and rouge — combining red powder produced from cochineal insect shells with French chalk (talc) — at home

Yet widespread disapproval continued. In 1860, for example, The Wisconsin Daily Patriot noted that "The use of toilet preparations, in the form of powder, paints, lotions, and other deleterious compounds, is becoming fearfully common, especially among young girls who have no sort of excuse for such an act of folly." Though similar sentiments prevailed well into the 1890s, newly-minted magazines, like The Ladies Home Journal and Women's Home Companion, offered an abundant supply of do-it-yourself formulas.

Attitudes changed when ready-made facial powders, balms, and lotions, like Pozzoni's Medicated Complexion Powder and Recamier Cream (an emollient applied at night), were marketed as healthful — free of lead, lime, arsenic, or any other dangerous matter.

As women joined the workforce at the turn of the century, many slipped powder or rouge in socially-acceptable lockets or chatelaine pendants for quick, on-the-go touchups. In time, enterprising five-and-dime stores carried round, hinged cases containing face powder, puffs, and mirrors. So did national mail-order houses, like Sears Roebuck & Co. Due to their small size, these containers became known as compacts.

As public preening became increasingly acceptable, the Cleopatra Vanity Box Company and the Scovill Manufacturing Company introduced bulky, loose-powder vanity boxes, marketing them as beauty aids. Though portable, they tended to be leaky and spilled.

This problem was resolved in 1915, when Pozzoni's portable, metal, lozenge-shaped, Boodle Box reached the market. In addition to including rouge, it replaced loose powder with blocks of no-leak, no-spill compressed powder. Moreover, the attractive Boodle Box initiated a new industry — manufacturing metal cosmetic containers in an array of appealing finishes, shapes and sizes.

When stars of the silver screen, like Theda Bara, May Pickford and Gloria Swanson, popularized daring, dramatic, made-up allure, cosmetic compacts became must-haves. Everyone wanted to look like a celebrity.

The compact craze soared during the Roaring Twenties, when making-up was a la mode. Scores of bobbed-hair flappers partied with celluloid or Bakelite wristlet, finger-chain, or tango-chain compacts at hand. Some preferred pendant compacts, or sleek, stylish Art Deco ones glittering with gemstones. Others cached trendy red-and-black Oriental-inspired creations, or obelisk, sphinx, or pyramid-shaped compacts, inspired by the recent discovery of King Tutankhamen's fabulous tomb, in their pouches.

As compacts became more popular, the Zinn Corporation, like many other metal-case manufacturers, provided scores of unbranded, empty models to mail order houses, perfumeries and cosmetic companies, who filled them with their own products. Other companies, including Stratton, Volupté, Evans, and Elgin American, created name brands. Some, in addition to slots for mirror, rouge and powder, left space for personal items like coin holders or note pads.

During the Depression, flat, roomy, round, "flapjack" compacts were all the rage. Though initially designed for dressing table use, they were soon seen outdoors as well. When small, chic, inexpensive models replaced "flapjacks," middle- class women often purchased several, suiting them to attire or desire. Over time, compacts became not only practical fashion accessories, but also personal statements. Ready-made round, oblong, square, or seashell-shaped metallic models were particularly popular. Flower images were also perennial favorites.

Well-to-dos, however, often preferred prestigious silver, mother-of-pearl, tortoise-shell, enamel, gold, or platinum bejeweled beauties by fine jewelers like Cartier, Hermes, Boucheron, Cartier, Tiffany, or Van Cleef & Arpels. Some of these, in addition to powder, rouge and mirrors, contained lipstick holders, space for cigarettes, and netting to prevent powder blocks from popping out. Some, fashioned like suitcases, gift boxes, envelopes, globes, or grand pianos, were amusing conversation-stoppers. Others featured matching evening bags, lipstick cases, and combs. Exclusive, commissioned compacts, however, came in any shape, size, and design imaginable.

As motorcar, rail, and overseas travel increased, inexpensive compacts, marking vacation spots from Yellow Stone National Park to Paris, made enviable gifts and souvenirs. Others commemorated noted events like the 1939 New York World's Fair, or depicted historic monuments.

During World War II servicemen often sent inexpensive, patriotic-themed, enameled "sweetheart" compacts to loved ones back home. Afterward, when plastics were re-purposed for civilian use, lightweight acrylics, first used in aircraft turrets, duplicated costly, handmade models. As a result, compact design, like cosmetic packaging in general, became more elaborate, sophisticated, and affordable.

Through the 1950s, quality compacts were still produced, by Stratton and Kigu, among others. Yet when leading companies, like Helena Rubenstein and Max Factor, marketed refillable or disposable models, and longer-lasting make-up meant women could touch-up less often, compact use waned. Finally, when the "natural look" became fashionable, they were relegated to bottom bureau drawers.

Since so many vintage compacts have survived, collectors often concentrate on particular brand names or ones from particular eras. Some seek models in certain shapes and styles. Some collect only engraved, Lucite, or petit point pieces. Others seek compacts reflecting a personal interest, be it ballet, boating, butterflies, or bird watching.

Whatever a compact's age or style, its condition is paramount. Though a scratched, rusted, dinged, dented, or discolored model may be a no-go, minimal damage, say some, increases its charm. Still, others prefer unused models, especially those that include original powder cases, puffs, sifters, mirrors, and packaging.

Today, these delightful collectibles may be found at antique shops, flea markets, estate sales, and at auction. Simple ones are generally quite affordable. Rare, unusual, or exceptional solid gold or sterling silver pieces by exceptional jewelers, on the other hand, generally command exceptional prices.

Due to their quality and beauty, vintage compacts make memorable anniversary, birthday, or any-day gifts. Heart-shaped and bright enameled Italian ones are especially romantic.

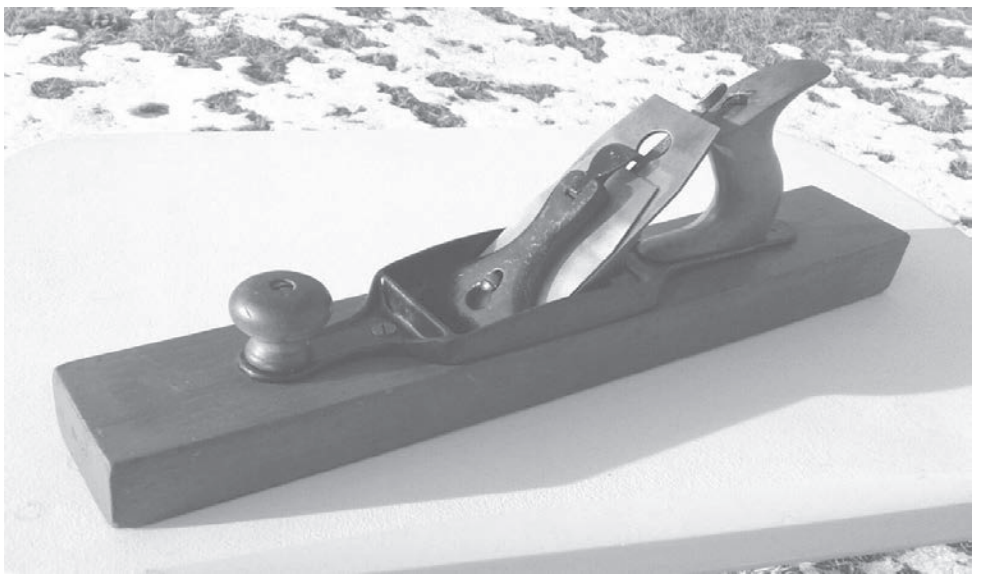
near the sole of the tool. As the angle changed, the depth of cut changed, taking heavier shavings from the wood.

Around 1865, following the Industrial Revolution, Leonard Bailey began producing innovative hand planes with cast iron bodies at his factory — Bailey, Chaney & Company, until May 1869. Bailey's designs revolutionized the wood plane industry, and Stanley Rule & Level (of New Britain, Conn.) purchased Bailey's patents in 1869. Bailey went to work for Stanley as a tool designer, and Bailey helped design Bailey, Victor, and Defiant bench planes. Stanley Rule became Stanley Works, producing all of Stanley tools. Justus Traut and other Stanley designers improved Bailey's original designs, and these new and improved hand plane designs became the basis for most modern, hand plane designs manufactured today; however, modern hand planes are made from wood, ductile iron or bronze which produces a tool that is heavier and will not rust.

Bailey's business arrangements with Stanley Rule were never smooth, and Bailey and Stanley sued and counter-sued each other for years, arguing patent infringements and commercial espionage. And while Stanley Rule and later Stanley Works usurped Bailey's fame, Bailey will always remain the true genius behind hand held wood planes.

The original Bailey design, purchased by Stanley Rule & Level, is still manufactured by Stanley Works, making the 21st century the third century of Bailey Planes production.

The Bailey designed hand planes, produced by Stanley Rule & Level, became popularly known as Stanley/Bailey planes. These planes are still highly prized by woodworkers, who believe Stanley/Bailey planes still represent some of the finest hand tools ever made.



Above: Stanley/Bailey No. 28 wood plane, patented 1898, which was offered on eBay for $110.

Below: This Stanley/Bailey No. 5 wood plane, marked "L BAILEY'S PATENT DEC 24, 1867" was offered on eBay for $1,020.

Tool collectors also prize Stanley/Bailey hand planes as some of the finest, most beautiful, and most desired hand tools ever manufactured.

It is difficult to put a price range on Bailey planes since age, wear, rust, and eye appeal all contribute to price. Planes with an abundance of rust are usually not desirable. Also, collectors prefer working planes and will often not buy old planes, even rare ones, which are non-working.

Look for the words "Bailey's Patent" stamped on the brass adjustment knob. Quite often the cutting blade is also stamped; although, cutting blades may have been changed in old planes.

Antique & Garden show cancels 2021 event

NASHVILLE, Tenn. – The Antiques & Garden Show of Nashville announced this week that it will cancel its 2021 event due to concerns related to COVID-19. The Show will resume in 2022.

"It was a difficult call to make, but in the name of keeping our guests, sponsors, dealers, volunteers, and other show partners healthy, the board determined that the 2021 Show should not happen," said Bo Tyler, chairman of the board of the Antiques & Garden Show. "We are all disappointed, but are confident that in these uncertain times, it's best to act with caution."

In a non-pandemic year, the show would feature more than 150 antiques and horticulture dealers, and expertly landscaped gardens.

Proceeds from the Show benefit Cheekwood and ECON (Economic Club of Nashville) Charities.

Despite the absence of a physical program, the Antiques & Garden Show leaders are inviting past supporters and benefactors to make a comparable contribution in lieu of purchasing a ticket to the 2021 Show. Taking part in this effort will ensure that the financial needs of the Show's beneficiaries, Cheekwood and ECON Charities, continue to be supported. Those interested in making a contribution of support can do so at www.antiquesandgardenshow.com.

Ashley Smith and Julia Spickard, who were slated to chair the 2021 Show, will now chair in 2022, Tyler said. "Of course, they respected the gravity of the situation and were gracious enough to agree to come back next year to make the 2022 Show the best ever."

To keep up to date with Antiques and Garden Show announcements and future programming and information follow the Antiques & Garden Show of Nashville on Facebook or Instagram (@antiquesandgardenshow).
