Cars roared off the auction block at Leonard's

BY KARIN MILLIMAN

OTTAWA LAKE, Mich. — “Phenomenal” is the word that Leonard’s Auction used to describe a recent online auction. There 430 registered bidders from California to Massachusetts and everywhere in between. Even our neighbors to the north from Canada were bidding on items in this auction.

Leading the sale was a 1948 Ford Anglia. The cherry red paint job really made this vintage vehicle pop. This choice ride was a Pro Gas and had Moroso valve covers. A powerglide transmission helped to make it run down the road. It came with two driveshafts. This eye-catcher still needed some completing touches. It had been stored in a climate-controlled garage and was offered with a clear title. The bidding started on the internet almost the minute this beauty was listed on the site. And it increased during the auction. Once it was on the auction block, the bids came in quickly. The final bid price to be named the new owner of this red vintage vehicle was an impressive $19,900.

Racing in right behind the Anglia was a sunny yellow 1931 Ford street rod. This one showed 14,864 miles on the odometer. It sported a 502 motor with a tri-power, along with a triple deuce carburetor. It also had an electric water pump, spit can and a 350 transmission. With an 11-inch torque convertor and a

Santa sells; so trade cards used his image

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

During the late 1800s, a favorite pastime for housewives was collecting small, illustrated advertising cards that are now called “trade cards.” Trade cards slowly evolved from cards used by tradesmen around 1800 to advertise their services. But it was not until the spread of color lithography, first demonstrated at the 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition, that trade cards became plentiful.

During the 1880s, trade cards became a major way of advertising America’s products and services. Local stores became the primary means of distributing trade cards, so many trade cards advertise both a product and the store where a person might purchase the product.

While many different products used trade cards for advertising, some of the product categories that relied heavily on trade cards were medicine, clothing, household, tobacco, sewing, stoves, farm, and food. Most of the cards possessed beautifully custom rear-end, it was a beauty. At this point in the vehicles' life, the seats needed to be installed. It looked complete, but had not been on the road in a few years. It had been sitting in a climate controlled garage and was sold with a clear title. It ended up driving off with a high bid price of $17,050.

A 1968 Chevrolet Camaro was obviously a much sought-after vehicle also. This car had the "WindiTight Engines". It had a partial 331 block engine and a Richmond five-speed transmission. With a Mark 5 clutch and a Dana 60, this one had restoration potential. It was not a complete car and had been sitting for years. But the bidders seemed intent on trailering this one home. The bids kept coming and that meant with the online bidding, time kept being added on to the end-time so the bidders could get in on the action. This one brought a final bid price of $13,555.

A 1972 Honda CB750 motorcycle brought its fair share of bids. This one was a Monstro Manufacturing Banzai-build high performance motorcycle with a supercharger. It had an RC Goldenrod magneto and was belt driven. It was a museum quality bike and came with a clear title. It really stood out with the brilliant blue and red features and gold trim. It had not been run in a few years but had been stored in a temperature controlled basement. It came across the finish line with a final bargain bid price of $4,150.

A 1978 Honda MC750 high-performance motorcycle sold for $3,250. A 1970 Honda CB750 frame, tank and seat with a title were sold for $675. And a 1977 Chevrolet Monza hatchback sold for parts only brought a bid of $1,450.

A lot of car parts were offered at this auction. A Mooneyham Supercharger with an Enderle birdcatcher for a big block was sold for $3,150. A supercharger with Holley carburetors and the birdcatcher sold for $1,100. A Littlefield blower complete with the birdcatcher and straps were sold for $1,950.

A Mallory super-mag 11 ignition distributor brought a final bid of $560 and a Hilborn big block Chevrolet injection manifold sold for $575.

If it was the complete motor you were looking for, that was sold also. A Chevrolet 510 big block motor on the stand was made available. This one had a couple of applications that included a drag motor for racing or a boat motor. The bid on this one was $3,250. A 1963 Chevrolet small block engine, C253, was on a rolling stand. It sold for $511. A second Chevrolet engine block with a stand brought a bid of $670.

A set of Dart cylinder heads brought a bid of $1,550. Some Edelbrock performer RPM 6045 cylinder heads sold for $780. A set of Carrillo Industries pistons with the connecting rods were new in the original box. They sold for $975. And a C99/29 Mopar transmission brought a final bid of $786.

And if you were working on car engines, you would be in the market for some equipment. A Kleen-Blast model 5000 sandblaster with the Tamco dust collector system was sold for $550. A Bridgeport Industries mill was sold for the final price of $1,850 while a Rockwell lathe and cabinet sold for $630 to help you out.

Some very fancy music sources were also sold. An audio linear TD 4001 turntable brought the impressive bid of $1,550. A Conrad-Johnson PVI0 A stereo tube preamplifier was sold for $1,500, while an Acoustat Trans-Nova twin 200 pure Mos0Fet power amplifier was sold for $455. A Conrad-Johnson PV2AR stereo tube preamplifier brought an impressive bid of $650.

A set of Acoustate

Magne-Kinetic interface speakers kept the volume cranked up for a bid of $1,050. And a Crown DC150a speaker selector sold for $240.

For more information call (734)856-6530.

Above: This Mooneyham supercharger/Enderle was sold for $3,150.

Above: Coming into the future from 1968, the bidders from 2020 didn't take long to race to the finish line on this Camaro with the final price of $13,555.

The Corgi FC-150 Jeep out sold the real thing by large margin

BY ERIC BRYAN

The FC-150 Jeep was based on the standard CJ-5 Jeep, and had a production span from 1956 to 1965. But the FC ("Forward Control,"—that's British English for "cab-over") Jeep never attained the totemic status of the standard Jeep or Land Rover. In fact, FC Jeeps are rare sights on the roads these days.

British diecast maker Corgi's Forward Control 150 Jeep had a successful run: The first model entered the range in the late 1950s and wasn't withdrawn until the early '70s. Corgi also produced several variations of its basic FC-150 model.

The Willys FC-150

The advent of the FC-150 was announced in Willys News in November, 1956. The machine premiered at the New York Auto Show and went on sale that December. Constructed on a Jeep CJ-5 chassis, the FC-150 initially had a 45 horsepower F4-134 Hurricane engine (also used in the CJ-5). The forward control arrangement meant most engine access was accomplished through the cab: a small hatch opened for quick oil checks, a larger cover could be removed in order to reach the spark plugs, and a two-section skirt came away quickly if the starter or generator needed attention.

In July 1958 Willys fitted the vehicle with heavier 3000 pound capacity axles. This modification included an up-graded suspension system, adding to the new versions' stability on turns, grades and rough ground.

The FC-150 could be had in a huge array of variations for a multitude of purposes. Beyond the basic pickup, these included a stake truck, a wrecker, a mini tractor-trailer (which got at least as far as a concept model), a fire truck and a dump truck. The vehicle's four-wheel drive capability, compactness, maneuverability and forward-control visibility also made it popular as a parking lot snowplow.

Manufacture of the FC series (first by Willys, then by Kaiser-Jeep) continued until the FC program was scrapped in 1965. The reason why the original vehicles are scarce today is simply that the forward control design didn't catch on in the U.S., resulting in a relatively low total FC production number of approximately 30,000 units (according to Jim Allen's Illustrated Buyer's Guide: Jeep). Versions of FC models were also made in Spain, and in India up until recent times.

Corgi Forward Control Jeep FC-150

Released as No. 409 in 1959, this model was issued in sky blue which was offset nicely by a distinctive red grille with cast JEEP lettering, silver painted headlights and front bumper. The cab was fitted with window inserts and had no interior. The model had spun wheel hubs, no suspension and a metal tow hook.

An excellent piece of detailing on this Corgi was the spare wheel wedged into specially-cast recesses on the right side of the bed. The upper recess which accommodated the wheel created an arch in the ledge in the bed, adding further realism to the model. Though without other working features, the doors and tailgate were clearly delineated in the casting. For good to excellent examples of the No. 409 with boxes, recent auction results show a range of $35-75. Mint models with boxes have fetched $100.

Corgi Hydraulic Tower Wagon

In 1961 Corgi introduced its Gift Set 14, Hydraulic Tower Wagon with Single Lamp Standard and Electrician. The vehicle was the FC-150 with a bed-mounted boom lift which raised and rotated, with a yellow plastic cradle attached to the end. As the boom raised and lowered, the cradle stayed level to the ground via a dual boom arrangement. The electrician figure who rode in the cradle was posed with arms overhead to emulate the changing of a lamp in the included freestanding lamp standard.

The model was issued in red with a white grille. Like the No. 409 this variation also had window inserts, spun hubs and no interior, but lacked the towing hook. Some rare sets included a double instead of a single lamp standard. (The New Great Book of Corgi notes that the Lamp Standard was from the 606 Kit Set series.)

For 1965 Corgi brought out an updated version of the model on its own as Hydraulic Tower Wagon on Forward Control Jeep FC-150, No. 478. This time issued in red with a silver grille or metallic green with a red grille, Corgi added an interior and spring suspension to this variation. (Anyone who grew up with 1960s Corgi Toys will attest to how much play value and realism the suspension and realistic treaded rubber tires added.)

The Corgi Gift Set 14, mint and complete, has realized $180 at auction. A set in the same condition but with the rare double lamp standard could fetch a bit more. For the No. 478, the good to mint range is $75-150.

Corgi FC-150 Jeep with Hood

Also for 1965 was No. 470, the Forward Control Jeep

FC-150 With Detachable Hood. An upgraded version of the No. 409 with spring suspension and interior, this model had a gray plastic canopy which fastened to the bed. Issued with a mustard, blue or light blue body it had red or yellow interior and a red grille. The all-important towing hook was included, but was changed to the plastic type.

The later versions had cast wheel hubs and were sold in window boxes. A treat here was the art on the reverse of the window boxes. It portrayed an apparently South or Central American jungle scene, with the Jeep rolling past a burro or donkey carrying a sombrero-clad rider, his hand raised in greeting. All of this was depicted under an orange sky, with sunbeams slanting onto the shadowy jungle greenery. This FC-150 model survived in the Corgi range until 1972.

Values for the No. 470 are similar to those of its earlier incarnation as the No. 409, with good to excellent plus packaging examples in the $35-75 range, and minty models going for $90-100.

Corgi Conveyor on FC 150 Jeep

Nineteen sixty-five was definitely the year of the FC-150 for Corgi, as yet another variation of the trusty Jeep entered the range at this time. Issued as No. 64, this was the Working Conveyor on Forward Control Jeep FC-150. For this model, Corgi pushed the play value through the roof. It had a complete conveyor belt system attached to a frame which was mounted to the vehicle's bed. The conveyor had separate front and rear booms which could be independently raised into different positions via hydro-sleeves.

The bottom end of the boom system featured a loading ramp which acted as a feeder for the conveyor belt. The underside of the ramp had a hazard stripes label affixed which was visible when the ramp was folded forward.

You could operate the rubber conveyor belts by turning a crank on the right side of the booms. The crank attached to the bottom roller of the upper boom, and on the left side of the booms the end of it terminated in a gear system which cleverly also gave drive power to the lower conveyor belt. Corgi mounted this gear system in a clear plastic housing so that you could see how the mechanics worked as you turned the crank. (Corgi also mounted this conveyor system on a specialized trailer to be towed by its Ford 5000 Super Major Tractor. This pair was introduced in 1966 as GS47, with a characteristically artwork-rich inner display plinth.)

As if this wasn't enough, this feature-rich model also came with a packet of plastic sacks and a worker figure to load them onto the conveyor.

The icing on the cake was the charming box art on the inner display plinth depicting a British farm cottage in a sunny setting. This FC-150 was made with a red body and yellow-orange grille and conveyor booms. Auction results for good, excellent and mint samples of this detailed model are roughly $75-100, $100-150 and $150-200, respectively.

Heaps of Jeeps
In terms of sales of the original FC Jeeps, the FC-150 is another case where the Corgi model outperformed the real machine by a huge margin: The combined number of units sold of the 409, GS14, 478, 470 and 64 from 1959-72 was well over two million. With the models much less scarce than the actual FC-150, maybe it's time for diecast collectors to reconsider this interesting machine. Surely the FC-150 should hold wide appeal for 4x4 enthusiasts!

Above: Woolson Spice “Merry Christmas” trade card, circa 1900, featuring girl in huge hat. This card is valued at $14.

Christmas

colorful and desired trade cards were distributed at Christmas. Christmas trade cards were produced in a potpourri of styles and scenes to capture everyone’s interests.

The heyday of trade cards was about 1890, and by 1900 trade cards had almost faded from existence when color advertising in magazines became more cost effective.

Collecting enthusiasts of the Victorian era pasted their Christmas trade cards in albums. Today’s collector, therefore, is likely to find a good proportion of his or her Christmas trade cards in old albums, forcing the collector to carefully soak, peel, and clean the card to remove old glue. This process is very difficult to do without damaging the reverse side. As interest in Christmas trade cards has increased in recent years, so have the prices.
