Furniture with Modern look takes top honors at Schmidt's

BY KARIN MILLIMAN

YPSILANTI, Mich. — Furniture with a Mid Modern look proved popular at a Schmidt's Antiques online auction. The event featured more than 200 lots from private collections in Franklin, Ann Arbor and Bloomfield Hills, Mich.

While it was made in 2016 a table from Knoll based on a 1957 design by Eero Saarinen was one of the auction highlights. The table featured an oval rosewood top and a black enameled oval tulip base. It had an aluminum support in the center and still retained the Knoll label and a paper label with manufacture date of Nov. 01, 2016 affixed to the underside. There was some minor wear to the top of this piece which measured 54 by 96 by 29 inches. It far surpassed its high estimate, selling for the final price of $3,750.

and ottoman attracted its fair share of attention. This mid-century piece was blue upholstered and had three removable cushions and black enameled legs. The matching ottoman had the Knoll label. The upholstery was quite worn with visible edge damage and there was some surface rust to the legs. The hammer didn't come down until it reached $2,500.

An Eames designed lounge chair and ottoman for Herman Miller, were offered. Designed in bent ash plywood with a black finish and black leather button-tufted upholstery, this piece just looked elegant. It included the Herman Miller "Eames" tags. There was some minor edge wear and slight wear to the leather, with some small scuffs on bases. It reached an impressive $3,250.

Sticking with the furniture, a Paul McCobb dresser sold for $1,600.

Turner toys provided fun for children of all ages

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

The John C. Turner Company, of Wapakoneta, Ohio, was famous for its line of "Victory is Won" flywheel metal toy trucks. John C. Turner founded the company that was named for him in 1915, but he founded it on the flywheel mechanism that I. Donald Boyer patented in 1897. Placing his flywheel mechanism into sheet-metal floor toys, Boyer revolutionized the American toy industry.

Boyer died in 1900, at the young age of 41, leaving behind his toy-making genius for other toy makers to use. His patent became the cornerstone of America's modern toy trucks.

Dayton, Ohio, has long been considered the "hub of innovation" since airplanes, cash registers, and numerous other industries were manufactured in or around Dayton. Around 1910 Dayton took its place in history as one of America's top toy making centers, and by 1920, Dayton was considered the "nation's largest producer of sheet-metal toys" with more than 220 toy patents produced in Dayton.

As old, cast iron toys rusted and broke, making them useless to children, sheet metal toys caught on. Advertising for the earliest sheet metal toys suggested, "You can bend them, but they won't break. Simply bend them back!"

It was during this sheet-metal toy frenzy that John C. Turner began making and selling toy trucks.

Turner not only envisioned a better toy truck, he envisioned better ways of selling them. His famous "Victory is won" flywheel toys were sold by direct mail only through advertisements in local papers and magazines.

Turner toy trucks are highly collected today, and dedicated collectors refer to the company as having two periods. The first Turner period was 1915 - 1935, when Turner sold his company. The second period was post-1935, when the toys still carried the Turner name but were not actually made by Turner.

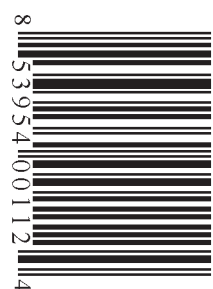

Many of Turner's truck are stream lined, reflecting the Art Deco influence of the historical period they were made in.

Most Turner toy trucks sell for a few hundred dollars. Mint conditioned Turner trucks will bring more, but a record value was suggested when a Turner pressed steel toy bus, circa 1920s, was valued at $5 - 6,000 on the PBS television show Roadside Antiques in 2010.

This one takes us back to the 1950s period when maple furniture was in demand. This dresser was very simple in looks and consisted of two separate chests on a very low table with brass knobs and turned tapered, very delicate looking, legs. It was marked with the branded label and still sported its original finish. There was some scuffing and the plating on the hardware showed some wear.

A 2010 Swag Leg desk from a George Nelson design for Herman Miller featured a cherry frame with a simple white laminate top. Painted dividers drew attention with their vivid colors of red, orange, blue and yellow against the white. It had two divided pull-out drawers on a chrome base with a cherry stretcher and included the oval metal label. It sold for $1,800.

From 2004, a George Nelson “Coconut” chair was designed for Vitra. This one had a black leather upholstered seat inside a white plastic shell. It was supported by stainless steel legs with integrated foot pads. Showing a bit of minor wear to the leather and some rubbing to front corners, this piece was still eye-catching. The unusual shape like a curved triangle was enough to begin a conversation anywhere. The final selling price on this piece was $2,300.

A pair of tan colored chairs from the 1960s was made by Mies Van der Rohe for Knoll. These “Barcelona” chairs were made of chrome-plated steel frames and had leather cushions. Only two of the cushions were original and the chairs were unmarked. There were some losses on the webbing that held the seat to the back joint and other small areas. The replaced cushions were missing four buttons. However, the minor issues didn’t deter the bidders. It took $3,000 to be named the new owner of this pair.

The collection of lighting was also sought after. A Bradley & Hubbard table lamp was gorgeous with the greens and yellows muting the light from the shade. This early 20th-century lamp showcased the Arts and Crafts era perfectly. The leaded shade had several small cracks and there was worn patina on the white metal base with its telescoping stem. It sold for $1,200.

Looking like a flower field had exploded was a 1970s era stained glass lamp. The intricate stained glass floral shade and the bronze tree form, gave this one a “pixie” affect. It had a mosaic style glass insert which was fitted inside the center portion of the base, making this lamp very unusual. The sale price on this one was $2,100.

Left: Made by the Cleveland Electrical Manufacturing company, this master time clock demanded attention at $1,100.

Below: Made by George Nelson for the Herman Miller Company, this simple swag leg desk brought an impressive bid of $1,800.

Above: This is an Eames chair and ottoman made for the Herman Miller Company. It sold for $3,250.

A Moooi Heracleum Endless Suspension Light only dated back to 2015. But this one had 45 lights, a very appealing nickel color finish, and poly carbonate lenses. Still housed in the original shipping box, it had obviously never been installed. It appeared to be complete, including installation sheets. Since it was unused, it was in very good condition. It sold for $1,900.

The watch collection proved to be quite valuable. A Swiss 14 carat gold pocket watch by Dunand was put up for bid. This one had a quarter hour repeat and Arabic numerals. The fancy gold hands and slide repeat added to the appeal. It had 89.9 grams total weight and some minor denting, hairlines in the dial, and some surface wear. It would wind, set and function correctly and was running when cataloged. This watch sold for $800.

An Illinois “Bunn Special” railroad watch was a sixty hour. It was a Fancy Wadsworth “Bunn Special Model” GF, DS with a “Montgomery” porcelain dial. The dial sported bold Arabic numerals and this time-keeper was marked “Illinois, Bunn Special, 23 Jewel, and 60 hour”. There was some case wear, a bit of light scratching, but it would wind, set and run when it was cataloged.

This fine piece sold for $750.

Selling for $650 was an Elgin 14 carat gold pocket watch. This one had a swing-out movement, and a fancy porcelain dial. It also had Arabic numbers and fancy gold hands. Weighing in at 78.1 grams total weight and showing just some case wear, and minor denting, this was a nice find. It would wind, set, and run when cataloged.

An Elgin “B. W. Raymond” model railroad watch with an up/down wind indicator sold for $450. This “Montgomery” watch had a porcelain dial with Arabic numerals and was marked “Elgin” with a star. The rear cover was engraved with “...1926, NYCRR”. This one did show significant case wear, and had a fine hairline crack in the dial. When cataloged, it would wind, set and was running.

A small offering of clocks helped to drum up more bids. A Cleveland Electrical Manufacturing Company master time clock from somewhere around 1882 to 1900 was featured. This one had a Seth Thomas movement. It was an eight-day time only with dead beat escapement. It had a papered metal dial, and was showing off a nickeled weight and pendulum. The black walnut, Eastlake style case with a gallery crest, had a single long door and a shaped drop. It did show an older refinishing with minor wear, some dial touchups, and evidence the electrical components had been removed. It stood an impressive 68 ½ inches high. The final sale price on this timekeeper was $1,100.

An E. Howard & Co. Re-Issue No. 10 figure-eight wall clock featured an eight-day, weight-driven time only movement and had a painted metal dial. The dark walnut case with its single shaped door and the original reverse painted glass added to its look. This one had some finish wear, a bit of minor damage, and the movement was dirty but running when cataloged. It hammered down at $700.

A turn of the century clamshell excavating bucket would fall in the “unusual” category. This one was more than likely a patent model or salesman’s sample. Either way, it had very detailed construction and was made of nickel-plated bronze with pulleys and riveted construction. It was marked “Made in USA” and “OS4”. When open, it measured 7 1/4 by 3 by 8 ½ inches. This very unique piece brought a high bid price of $1,300.

Above: This Paul McCobb dresser was a reminder of the “blonde” furniture and sold for $1,600.
