Goodyear sign runs to $920 bid at Rowley Auctions

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

ATTICA, Mich. — With 43 auctions already conducted in 2021, Rowley Auctions is off to a great year. Their large online estate and consignment auction held April 2-7 was a prime representation of their successful season, with 1,448 lots on the block. Offered were antique and vintage items ranging from bronze statues and silver overlay figures to antique furniture and railroad lanterns. In the collectible's category were die-cast cars, coins, advertising pieces, and older-generation video games. Contemporary goods included commercial mowers, shop tools, and hunting/fishing gear...

Prominent in the auction were bronze statues, most of which sold for impressive three-figure sums. A 30-inch bronze Indian statue reached $820 while an 18-inch bronze of a French soldier with a drawn sword sold for $400. Another French soldier statue, 24 inches tall with a marble base sold for $202.

More diminutive, the two-dozen silver overlay figures and statuary commanded much less than the bronzes. The highest amount of $28 went for a 4.25-inch sterling silver horse. A 3.5-inch bird reached $26 while a larger 7.25 inch bull sold for $25. Prices remained in the twenties for all but six of the remaining pieces which sold in the teens.

Four dozen lots of antique to modern signs and advertising were also offered. The auction's second-highest bid of $920 went to one of those items — a 36-inch Goodyear double-sided porcelain flange sign in good condition. Coming in at

Stools kept farmers comfortable while milking

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

When I was a boy, I was clumsy, so I more than once knocked over my milk glass. When this happened, my mother, Opal, would quickly smile and say, "Don't cry over spilt milk." I was too young then to care where the saying came from, but adult curiosity has shown me James Howell, British historian and writer, first used this saying in Paroimography in 1659. Howell's and my mother's usage both meant there is no use in being upset over situations that have already happened and cannot be changed, such as when a cow kicks over a milking stool, upending both the milk bucket and the dairy farmer.

For centuries, cows were milked by hand twice a day in fields or in cowsheds. Farmers would carry milking buckets and milking stools to the cows, wherever they were, and milk them.

A low, usually three-legged milking stool (three-legged so that the farmer could lean forward into the cow without toppling over) with a half-circle flat seat was specially made to help with the milking.

The finest milking stools were carved from elm, maple, hickory, or even walnut or other hard wood with legs of ash or oak. Milking stools were made of a thick piece of wooden plank, approximately 9 ½ inches by 8 ¼ inches in size, cut with a semi-circular shape. A farmer used a brace and bit to bore three holes into the stool's seat, into which stiff wooden legs, approximately 9 inches long, were fitted. Truly classically styled milking stools have a short, 4 ½ inches long handle carved into the seat plank or attached to it. The handle is used to easily pick up and carry the stool.

The expression, "don't cry over spilt milk," originated from simple one-legged milking stools that enabled $780 was an 18-inch Zerolene double-sided porcelain flange sign, also in good condition. At the other end of the spectrum was a modern outdoor metal fretwork Taco Bell sign, grabbing just $26.

Video gamers were drawn to two-dozen lots of classic games and accessories. An 86-piece lot of Nintendo NES games that included titles like Above: This circa 1900 wood-burning stove which was bid to $231 was made in Detroit by Jewel Oak Stoveworks.

Above: Vintage stereo gear is in demand. This Pioneer 80 watt-per-channel amplifier, won for $282 will be a nice addition to someone's home audio setup.

Battle of Midway, Super Mario Brothers, and Duck Hunt sold for $360. Another lot, with 184 PlayStation 1 games, including Dare Devil Derby, Moto Racer, and Bogey Dead reached $356. Yet another batch, with just 44 Nintendo Gameboy games, including several copies of Tetris went for a surprising $303.

For the die-cast car and toy collector, there were some exciting catches including a rare 1960s Lesney Matchbox G2 transporter set, manufacturer-sealed in error with one car lacking. For that, the hammer struck at $267. Another rare Lesney Matchbox piece, landing $178, was a mint-condition blister pack containing a cleansing service truck. Thirty-two additional lots of die-cast vehicles offered including two 1:16 scale tractors (a Deere for $18 and a Case Farmall for $17), four Maisto 1:18 scale cars in boxes averaging $10, and four 1:24 scale boxed sets, grabbing $12-$13 each.

There was a broad array of antique and collectible items spanning the late 19th-century to around the 1960s. A circa 1900 Detroit-made Jewel Oak Stoveworks No. 18 wood burning stove, sold for $231. From the same era, selling for $312 was baker's cabinet by Wilson Kitchen Cabinet (sold by Sears) with glass-front doors, spice and flour bins, and original hardware. A good-cosmetic-condition wood Silvertone "tombstone" tabletop radio from the 1930s picked up $81. From the 1980s came an untested 80 watt-per-channel Pioneer stereo amplifier, Model SA-9500 II landed for $282. To go with it, two different metalized album pressings were available, both with certificates of authenticity. A copy of Pink Floyd's 1973 The Dark Side of the Moon sold for $178 and a 1979 AC/DC Highway to Hell reached $112.

Being a consignment auction, not everything offered was antique or vintage. The auction's highest bid of $3,350 went for a modern Kubo-and never assembled Schwinn Apple Crate Stingray Bicycle - a limited-edition 50th-anniversary re-release of the popular 60s/70s era bike - sold for $530. And, to assemble that bike, there were plenty of tools, including a three drawer Craftsman toolbox filled with Craftsman wrenches, sockets, and drill bits, all appearing unused, was bid to $152.

May is a great time to find a vintage gift

If, like me, you grew up with an LP featuring the original Broadway cast of "Camelot" spinning on your turntable (Julie Andrews! Robert Goulet! Richard Burton!), the song "The Lusty Month of May" is permanently etched into your brain. Even if that joyous song is not part of the soundtrack of your life, I'm betting you would agree that May is probably the most feminine of months, with Mother's Day very nearly in the middle. Named for the Greek goddess Maia, the month of May is unquestionably a beautiful time of year, and it's no accident it is also the chosen time for showers (bridal and baby). All of which means that this is the perfect time for thinking about vintage gifts for women.

But unlike me, you probably have not known Linda Sarubin for 35-plus years. We go waaay back, to a time when she had a nifty little shop on Read Street in downtown Baltimore. More years than I can imagine, she and her husband (Carroll Swam) moved to rural Gatchellville, Pa., where they bought an old house (no surprise there). But, as it turned out, the adjoining country store (complete with new old stock) was thrown into the sale, making it the ultimate BOGO deal, perfect for these two antique dealers.

These days, even though her lifestyle has changed, Linda's taste in old things has not. As for me, any excuse to reconnect with her is a good thing, so I recently decided to pick her brain, seeking inspiration for cool stuff with which to gift the special women in our lives.

While chatting with Linda, it immediately became clear to me that she thinks "out of the box." This being 2021 ("is that what year this is?" she asked, having, like the rest of us, been out of the loop for a little too long), today's women "do everything" and might appreciate a non-traditional gift. Even so, "Mother's Day is a day to give back to a friend, aunt, or sister, or maybe even to ourselves." As she noted, we have all been "mothered in some way or another." And she always recommends gifting with old things.

That said, why not surprise Mom this year by making the traditional breakfast

Vintage Gift

in bed with a vintage toaster (and then giving her that quaint kitchen tool)? "Normally, Moms would be insulted if they received kitchen appliances as a Mother's Day gift," but if they receive vintage appliances, it might be a different story. Or how about a vintage housedress in which to relax? My Mom remembers seeing "swirl" dresses advertised on a mid-day television program aimed at homemakers, and she took advantage of telephoning in her order, back in the day. Some of those dresses, it would appear, have survived, and Linda thinks they might still be a welcome change to sweatpants. "We've all been stuck in the house for the past year because of Covid, but there's no reason why you can't be stylish (author's note: circa 1950) as well as comfortable." Looking for something a bit dressier? How about a vintage hat to "frame Mom's pretty face"? Or maybe this is the time to buy some "pretty vintage linens, especially nice, since we are home now more than usual" and we need to "enjoy the little things"? On the other hand, Linda sees the beauty in vintage buttons, and similarly, she has long appreciated all things Bakelite. Because they're ageless, she suggested that no one wouldn't be thrilled with yet another bangle. "An armload of vintage Bakelite bracelets from the 1930s would be my favorite gift," she declared. On the other hand, a sentimental greeting card might touch Mom's heart. Linda might be a traditionalist, but that doesn't mean she hasn't kept up with the times. If you can't travel there, catch up with the Gatchellville Store on Facebook and Instagram. And, as for next month, well, in keeping with the musical theater theme, June will be "bustin' out all over," as, spoiler alert, "Vintage Style" talks with Linda's husband and business partner about "guy stuff."

Vintage baseball gloves are a perfect catch for collectors

BY DOUG GRAVES

No piece of baseball equipment is as vital to any player than the glove. Next to uniform jerseys and bats, gloves are some of the rarest and costliest pieces of game-used equipment.

A 1997 Derek Jeter game-used model sold by Goldin Auctions showed great wear and two autographs by the Yankee great. The glove (which sold for $5,000) still had remnants of pine tar and traces of infield dirt, and the outer thumb has 'Derek Jeter' embroidered in gold thread.

At a Sotheby's auction in 1999, the Hollywood star Billy Crystal plunked down $239,000 for a Rawlings glove Mickey Mantle used in his 1966 season. The glove, with the elaborate Mantle stamped signature with looping Ms, was worn during the peak of Mantle's power.

One would need deep pockets to own gloves from other stars. A MacGregor model worn by Willie Mays, perhaps the best fielding center fielder ever, can range anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000. Rawlings gloves used by Ernie Banks, the talented Chicago Cub second baseman, go for roughly the same price.

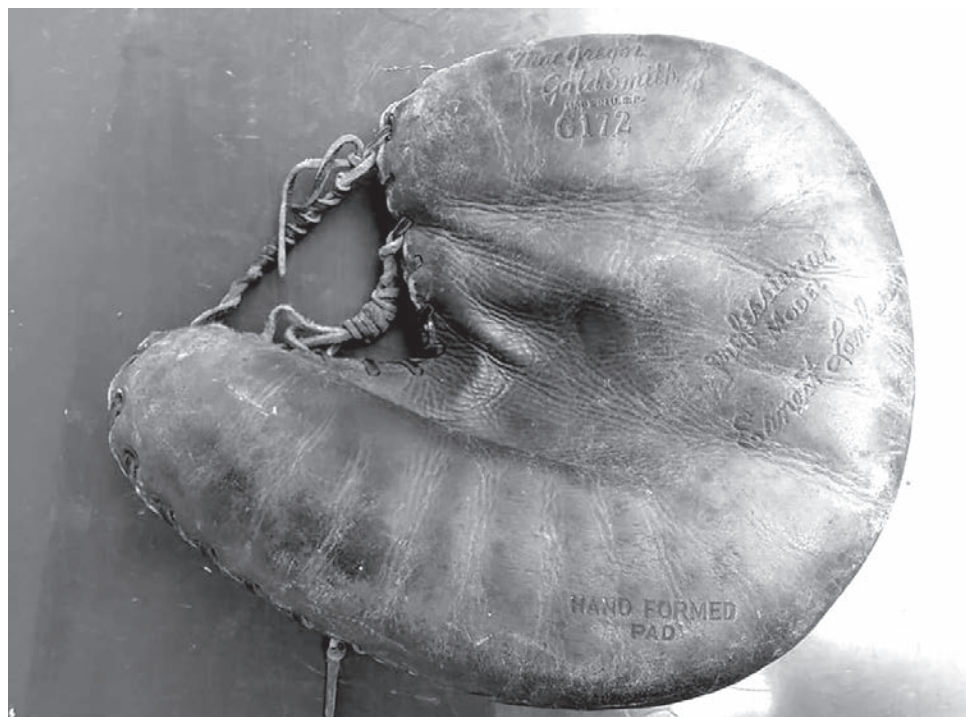

Dave McCann, former owner of Sports View Investments in Illinois, has seen many vintage gloves cross his path the past 25 years. As with any high-ticket item, McCann warns "buyer beware."

"If you plan on spending big bucks on a glove you believe has been used by a particular athlete you need to make sure there is satisfactory documentation establishing a link between the player and his glove," McCann said. "I tell people to do their homework by matching photos on the Internet to models. Many times, the players don't even remember which glove they used. At a recent baseball card show, I turned down a $400 glove that had been autographed by Detroit Tiger outfielder Rocky Colavito. While the autograph appeared genuine, the glove was made of inferior leather and it was too small to have actually been used in a major league game."

While there are those out there in search of a piece of history signed by an all-star player and willing to shell out thousands of dollars, others for any early baseball gloves, even those without a personalized signature.

"Over the past 10 years I've noticed more and more people in search of these relics, and that's just what they are," McCann said. "These old gloves look old, rustic, very worn and often musty smelling. What people are searching for are the embossed names of stars of the past, regardless of the condition. Of course, the better condition the higher value, but having a glove with the name like Nellie Fox, Hank Aaron or other known major league player brings back memories of games in the school yard. Collectors of these vintage baseball gloves and mitts are on the look-out for readable label and the embossed name of the player."

Milk Stools

a farmer to keep precariously balanced on their two feet and one-legged stool, producing a tri-pod effect, as they squatted next to a milk cow. These stools were sometimes made from old stair banisters, table legs, or other turned pieces of wood, making them fancy looking and more appealing to farmer and collector both. One-legged milk stools were only one good swift kick away from being spilt milk.

Few milking stools were mass-produced. A farmer, who doubled as a reasonably good woodworker, would spend long hours during the winter months, fashioning a milking stool in his barn or home, near a warm stove or fire. He used simple hand tools and produced smooth, rugged stools that would last a lifetime.

Today, hand-made milking stools are highly collectible as both symbols of simpler times and as symbols of the ingenuity that made America great.

Recently, I found an old milking stool for sale at a barn sale near Ben Hur, Arkansas. It was hand made by the seller's grandfather, and the price was just $15. It now sits in our entry hall, near a window, with a potted plant on it. I'm not a true collector of milking stools since I only have the one, but there are big-time milking stool collectors around.

I read an article in an old Illinois Country Living magazine, April 1996, about a woman, Jean Mehl, who collected old milking stools. At the time of the article, Mehl had about 200 milking stools in various shapes, colors, and sizes, but she wasn't just sitting around on her collection, she was still actively searching for more stools.

Another old article I once read described "sanitary" milking stools that were made of metal and could be easily and sanitarily cleaned. Companies began making these following the American Industrial Revolution, but they became popular in the 1920s as small farms began consolidating and sanitation became important in the milk industry that followed.

Sanitary milking stools were mass-produced and sold in Sears & Roebuck and Montgomery Ward catalogs in the 1920s and '30s. Some of these sold new for around 50 cents back then.

Antique, three-legged milking stool with classic half-circle design that is valued at $125.

Old, primitive, half-circle wooden milking stool that is valued at $50.

Vintage Baseball Gloves

dates to the season of 1869, when Cincinnati Red Stockings catcher Doug Allison first experimented with the idea of having a glove made for him by a local saddle maker. At that time, however, it was considered “unmanly” for players to seek protection for one’s hands and the use of a glove was considered a sign of weakness.

In 1875, Charles Waite of the St. Louis Brown Stockings became the first fielder to wear a fingerless glove. Players disapproved of Waite’s use of the glove and it would take a few more years before the use of gloves became accepted. With the speed of pitches now greatly increased, balls were hitting fielders’ hands with much more force. Players then began adopting a tight fingerless glove for use in the field while catchers normally wore a pair of gloves on each hand.

Albert Spalding was a sensational ball player at that time, playing for the Boston Red Stockings and Chicago White Stockings. He retired in 1876 and opened a sporting goods store in Chicago, obtaining the rights to produce the official National League ball. Another star at that time, Alfred Reach, formed his own sporting goods store and earned millions. Reach Sporting Goods is one of the first manufacturer of baseball gloves.

“Strangely, baseball glove manufacturing varied by decade,” McMann said. “The glove was simple at first and each decade evolved with improvements made, suggestions made by players themselves.”

Gloves and mitts from the 1880-1899 period had no web and were referred to as “workman” style gloves. Gloves at this time were simple leather gloves with the fingertips cut off.

“These gloves are extremely rare and oftentimes had a wooden button with a metal attachment on the back strap,” McMann said. “These are the most desired style in the glove collecting arena.”

From the 1900-1909 decade came the development of the full web design. “Full Webs” are sewn directly to the thumb and forefinger. By 1910 the one-inch web design started to appear. From 1910-1919 came the development from the full web to the one-inch web. These webs were 1 to 1 ½ inches wide and sewn directly to the thumb and forefinger. Manufacturers started using lace to connect the thumb and forefinger. Around 1915, gloves started to feature laces at the wrist as opposed to a sewn seam.

By the 1920s and 1930s, gloves had become specialized to a player’s position. Catcher mitts included extra padding due to the increased velocity of pitches, and first-base mitts were designed like giant scoops, since many throws from the left side of the infield were not always accurate.

Between 1920-1929, manufacturers saw the need to developing the “Lacing Device” and using lace between the thumb and forefinger, and this eventually led to the “Tunnel Loop”, with leather strips laced between the thumb and forefinger.

“The next decade we start the modern style of web design,” McCann said. “First it was a single tunnel, then the double tunnel, the T-web, and then by the early 1940s the triple tunnel and H-web designs were introduced. These were all separate webs that were laced to the glove. Until the late 1940s fielders’ gloves for the most part have no lacing between the fingers, and collectors know these as “Split finger” gloves.”

The development of glove design slowed during the war years but took off strong afterward as witnessed by the many other manufacturers besides Reach and Spalding. Other makers included Denkert, Diamond, Draper & Maynard, Dubow, Goldsmith, Hutch, J.C. Higgins, Ken Wel, McGregor Goldsmith, Nokona, Rawlings, Simmons and Wilson.

“In the ‘40s, gloves were being designed to make it easier for infielders to pick up grounders and get the ball into the throwing hand quickly,” McCann said. “For outfielders, gloves were designed to help the player snag a fly ball on the run. They also had deeper pockets so the ball would more than likely stay in the glove when the fielder hit the ground making a catch.”

Jumping on the glove manufacture band wagon in the 1950s were Franklin, Marathon, Montgomery Ward, Sonnmatt and Gelknap.

The web developed in the 1950s was a one-piece anchored, triple tunnel web with large triple lock web. A 12-inch size rule was incorporated in this decade.

Gloves of the 1960s involved solid one-piece webs, tightly laced to the thumb, forefinger and wider “U” shaped crotch. Spiral laced bridges emerged, as well as interlaced and basket weaved webs. Trapper webs continued to be used but begin to be built with a more solid bridge, after Rawlings introduced the Trap-Eze models.

In the 1970s, manufacturers began to make gloves as long as 13 inches and 14 inches. Full and hinged webs with different lacing devices dominate the 1980s, making it difficult to distinguish the age of the glove by the web alone.

Arthur Katsapis has been collecting vintage baseball memorabilia for more than 20 years. Through his website (found at www.vintage-baseball-gloves.com) collectors can browse vintage gloves, bats, balls and even clothing.

“The Internet has made getting gloves easier but many of us would agree that it’s taken the personality out of the hobby,” Katsapis said. “We used to have glove get-togethers, talk on the phone about gloves, or trade boxes of gloves. Now it’s eBay.”

David Seideman, another collector for more than 30 years and former editor-in-chief of Audubon magazine, estimates there are a “few thousand hardcore collectors,” and their ranks have been bolstered by aging baby boomers.

“Basically, they’re collecting their memories,” Seideman said. “But having people ransack their attics has also flushed out some valuable gems, like a Duck Web glove, the ‘holy grail for collectors,’ Seideman said, “or a Tornado Palm glove. Those rarities can go for as much as $7,500.”

Above: Looking very much like a lobster claw is this 1940s Spalding trapper glove measuring 12 inches from hinge to web. There was no endorsement on these gloves, but the fact that there are no holes, rips or tears inside or out made this item popular at a recent auction. Trappers were popular through the 1960s.
