ACROSS THE AUCTION BLOCK

Ship model sailed away with $300 bid at Merritt auction

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

GREENVILLE, Mich. — Merritt's April 26 online auction presented items from three Michigan estates: two from Manistee and the continuation of an estate sale begun in previous weeks. In full, there were 430 lots of furniture, collectibles, glassware, automobilia, ammunition, and sporting items.

Cabinetry stood out, with seven good pieces available. Getting the auction's highest bid, at $775, was an antique 74 by 79-inch oak school cabinet. Soon after came a two-piece antique hutch, with three glass doors on top and two dovetail drawers and cabinet openings on the bottom. It sold for $245. An unbelievable bid of just $85 took home a 1920s-era waterfall Kroehler Sterling buffet, featuring glass doors on top and a single-drawer/single-cabinet configuration on the bottom.

Other great pieces of antique furniture were offered. An early hard-rock maple butcher block was purchased for $290. A pre-1900 John Widdicomb walnut youth bed, featuring a design originally introduced at the Philadelphia Exposition in 1876 sold for $120. The bed was gifted by Harriet Richards whose father was a partner in the Widdicomb furniture business in Grand Rapids, Mich. There was also a handmade Tobey secretary made in Chicago snagged for just $100. The possibly mahogany desk featured claw feet, brass knobs, and brass locks on each drawer.

Outside of the furniture category, antiques included a 38 by 30-inch wooden ship model that reached $300. A good condition circa 1912 National Cash Register (Dayton, Ohio) Model 336, still in with its key, sold for $240. One lucky bidder paid just $130 for an oak Howard Miller grandfather wall clock originally sold at retail for $1,200. The key-wound clock still had its key and could play triple chimes. Right: Perfect for over a fireplace, this wood sailing ship model rose to $300.

fans had some interesting vintage pieces including 31 lots of vintage .22-caliber ammunition. Prices ranged from $6 for a single box of Western Super-X 22 rimfire cartridges to $32 for a lot of 4 Super-X 22 long rifle shells. There were also nine lots of vintage animal traps, including a lot of four Conibear traps picking up $19, and a Sterling MJ 500 Fox and Coyote Trap that sold for $16. The others grabbed anywhere from $4 for a lot of two small

Toy collectors can still move milk with miniature trucks

By Larry LeMasters

In "Fiddler on the Roof," Tevye is a poor Jewish milkman, who delivers milk in a horse-drawn cart. Before the movie is over Tevye himself is pulling the cart. A pulled cart represents the earliest type of milk delivery.

Milk delivery used to be an important part of a family's daily life that was often taken for granted. As towns grew into cities, the process of getting milk from the cow to the farmer to the grocery store or directly to a consumer's back porch grew. Today, not only the history of milk delivery but also the conveyances used to deliver fresh milk is important to historians and collectors.

Milk delivery in America began with the Industrial Revolution.

Above: Very rare, Champion cast-iron milk truck, circa 1930s, that was offered on eBay for $2,600.

As people moved to cities like New York or Chicago, they found no room for a dairy cow in their yard. More and more families began seeking out local dairy farmers to purchase milk from, but it soon became apparent that farmers needed to deliver their milk if they wished to sell it. Dairy farmers, like Tevye, began bringing milk into the cities, and soon the need for milkmen and delivery conveyances blossomed.

The earliest milkmen or farmers carried milk in bulk containers, not in bottles. Using a dipper, the deliveryman would dip milk into a family's milk pitcher or home container. In 1878, the first milk bottle was patented, making milk delivery easier, more sanitary, and uniform. Since homes had iceboxes, not refrigerators, daily milk delivery was necessary to prevent spoilage.

In the 20th century, insulated milk boxes appeared on the front or rear porches of houses, allowing the person to place empties into the box and allowing the milkman to deliver or replace the empties with full bottles of milk. Payment for the milk was often left inside the box.

When motorized transportation came on the milk trucks of all types replaced the horse and cart, revolutionizing milk delivery.

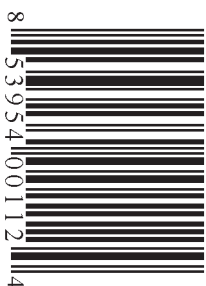

Following World War II, the rise in refrigeration and automobile ownership allowed for the rise in larger grocery stores. People began driving to the grocery store to purchase milk, and the need for home delivery of milk began to decline. Pasteurization led to longer shelf life for milk, and the demand for store-bought milk led to larger milk transport vehicles. Today, enormous tanker trucks carry milk, and nearly overnight the need for home delivery ended, and the delivery milkman became extinct.

Milk Trucks

Today, milkmen and their conveyances are kept alive in the collections of toy and model milk trucks.

There are several different Marx, Dinky, Matchbox, and Buddy L milk trucks on the secondary markets. One of the most expensive is the Marx “Diary Milk Truck” from the 1930s. Originally painted “milk” white, these sheet metal trucks have three milk churns, cans, in the back that fit inside a slotted bed. Labeled “Marcrest Dairy,” these trucks are offered on eBay in used (badly in need of restoration) condition for around $165. Occasionally, one of these Marx milk trucks are offered in mint condition with original box for around $700, making them one of the more expensive toy milk trucks around.

Dinky and Matchbox were competing companies, both based in England, but Dinky easily wins the milk truck race. Matchbox produced a nice milk truck in the 1960s with cream-colored milk bottles that is valued at around $90 today (mint with box), but Dinky provided children and then collectors with a plethora of milk trucks, including its die cast Studebaker milk truck of the 1950s. Labeled “Nestle,” these trucks came with 10 milk churns. Today, with original box and all parts, in played with condition, these trucks are valued at $1,100.

Dinky also produced Citroen and Ford milk delivery trucks, circa 1950s, that are also expensive “toys” for a collector. The Citroen milk truck is valued at over $1,000 today, and the Dinky Ford milk truck is valued at over $800.

An interesting toy milk truck to watch for is the Sifo wooden milk truck from the 1950s. Sifo Company (also Sifo Toys) produced wooden children’s toys, primarily filling an early educational niche. Sifo made their toys in Norway, Mich., so they are all “Made in USA.” The company closed its doors in 1975. Sifo’s wooden milk truck, with all six milk churns but in used condition, is valued at $70.

Above: Sporting items were not always small. This Walker Bay sailboat ($235) was 9 feet and could hold three passengers.

Above: At just $245, the buyer who won this antique hutch, with glass doors and quality dovetail joinery walked away with a much better piece than would be found in today’s retail stores.

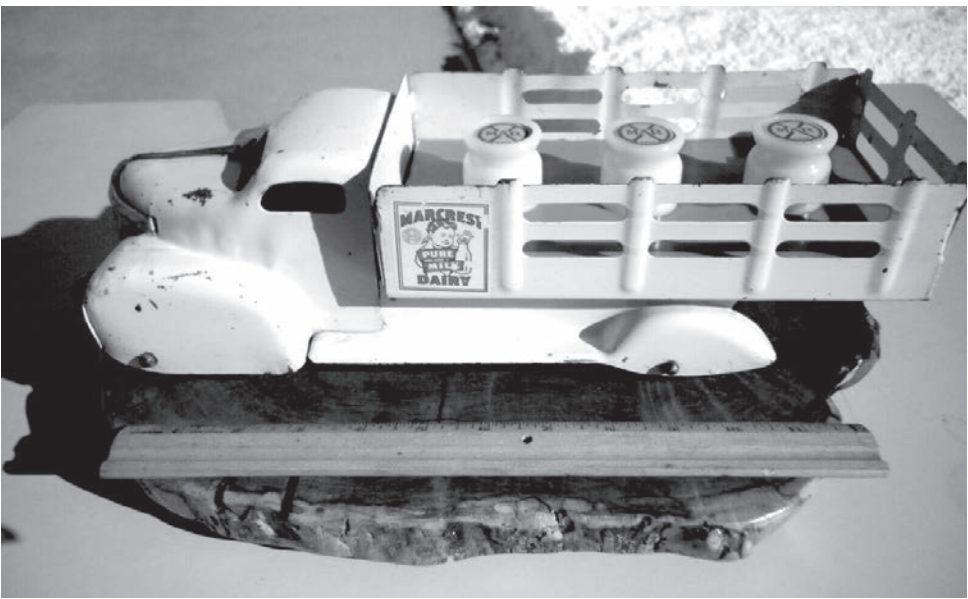

Right: National Cash Register (NCR) was a staple in Dayton, Ohio for 125 years. In its early years, it produced iconic cash registers like this circa 1912 Model 336 which got bid to $240.

Above: Vintage Marx “Dairy Milk Truck,” circa 1930s, with inserts and bottles of milk. Original mint condition with box, this truck is valued at $700.

find milk trucks includes INGAP Padova’s tin wind-up truck from the 1930s with six churns ($650), Richard’s Toy Company’s, of Canada, ride-on “Milk Truck,” “circa 1940s, that is made of pressed steel ($500), and Trujillo’s Leche “Milk” truck. Trujillo is a Mexican toy company from the 1960s, and its milk truck is valued at $450 on today’s markets.

There are lots of wonderful and exciting antique toy milk trucks just waiting for new collectors.

Coleman tool collection will power Chupp/United Auctions offering

BY ERIC C. RODENBERG

SHIPSHEWANA, Ind. – Hanging in Myrna Coleman's home in western New York is a poignant sign.

It reads: "We may not have it all together, but together we have it all."

"That pretty much sums up the work and play during our last 26 years," Myrna says of life with her husband, Dan, who died in February. "He was a man who enjoyed life. He loved people, was always curious, always reading and learning. We worked and played together as a team ... a lot of good memories."

During those 26 years, Dan and Myrna Coleman built what is regarded by many as the largest hand tool collection in America. Given that it's difficult to quantify such a claim, owning more than 2,600 levels, 500 plus hammers, and numerous hand wood planes while building and outgrowing their museum many times over lends credibility to such bragging rights.

Not that the Coleman ever bragged, but Auctioneer Greg Carter, with United Auctions of Utica, New York, said he has heard the claim "at least 20 times" from tool collectors.

"I've also heard that," Myrna says.

Dan and Myrna worked together as title pipeline analysts for gas and oil companies, throughout much of the United States. Their playtime was filled by auctions, flea markets, antique tool shows and anywhere they could see a new tool or hear a new story.

Chupp

"The job enabled us to have the collection," she said. "Then it got so big, that the collecting overtook the job. It became our priority."

They also amassed more than 2,000 pieces of American pottery, including Hull, Hall, Roseville, Fiesta and more, but their true passion was hand tools.

Myrna, herself, was interested in collecting hammers, "any hammer 7-pounds and under." While traveling on assignments that could take anywhere from a few weeks to more than a year, they became active members of tool clubs in several states. They worked and played right up until last Christmas, before 84-year-old Dan became ill and died in February.

A large part of the hand tool collection, co-brokered by Carter, will be selling at Chupp Auctions in northern Indiana. About 400 special antique tools from the Coleman collection will be sold during Chupp's auction on June 3-5.

Carter, the western New York auctioneer, who is working with Chupp Auctions, said a decision was made months ago to have the sale in Indiana because business in New York was so haphazardly governed during the Covid pandemic.

“We just thought that Indiana was a little more stable,” he said. “It had remained mostly in business throughout much of the pandemic.” But, Carter added, as a gesture of goodwill to western New York buyers, United Auctions will bring sold items back to its home base – free of shipping charges – for successful bidders.

This sale will mark the first offered segment of the massive Coleman Collection which Carter said will continue to sale “well into 2022.”

Bidding for the auction will be live at the Chupp auction house in Shipshewana, in addition to online bidding with LiveAuctioneers, Invaluable and AuctionZip.

The three-day auction will also feature the Olan and Janie Bentley Collection of cut out wrenches, antique and vintage seed corn advertising and farm primitives.

From the Coleman Collection alone, there will be offered more than 80 levels, numerous hand planes, chisel sets, braces, hammers and hatchets, Stanley four-square tools, Keen Kutter tools, a 1918 framed Stanley calendar, several anvils, primitive and machinist toolboxes and advertising postcards.

The Coleman Collection includes several near mint condition tools in display cases. Chief among these sets is a Bedrock corrugated plane set, including every model made by Stanley Works during the early 20th century, including the Model No. 602 (C), considered the "Holy Grail" of plane collectors. In addition, a Stanley Bedrock No. 602 will also be sold in a separate lot.

Another "star of the sale" is a store display case of Stanley Bailey planes, initially found by Myrna, which includes all the early Bailey planes from the No. 1 through the No. 8 Models.

"I always liked to surprise Dan with my finds," Myrna says. "He would get so excited. He did much of the research and I tagged many of the tools with information on their background. I always liked the history you could feel from holding an old tool in your hands. In great part, this was what built America.

"I collect some of what people would think are the oddest things, like old iron register (heating) covers and foot pedals and treadles from sewing machines, especially the real ornate decorated ones. They make great wall hangers.

"It might be a little crazy, but life is so interesting. How can you pass these things up?"

Among the rarities is a 6-inch Disston & Sons brass advertising ashtray from the pioneering saw manufacturing company.

On June 4, the second day of the Chupp Auction, will focus on the Olen and Janie Bentley collection, which includes more than 75 cut-out wrenches, including early tools made by C&J, John Bull, Bradley Wonders, Casaday, Comet and W Plow Co. Bentley's esteemed collection of seed corn advertising items include more than 150 seed corn license plate toppers, more than 200 seed corn signs and more than 60 seed corn bags.

Also included in the 3-day sale will be a salesman sample John Deere grain drill box, which is expected to be highly contested among collectors.

Not to be overlooked is a “one of a kind” exact scale model of an early designed Buick created by an employee in the company’s experimental department in 1921. Measuring 42 inches long, 16 inches wide and 19 inches tall, the model was a showpiece of the 1923 Detroit Car Show. It was entirely handmade, except for the Goodrich Silvertown tires that were purchased for $4 each.
