Estate auction for an auctioneer

BY KARIN
MILLIMAN

EAGLE, Mich. — K & M Auctions saw the final hurrah on July 10 as Kelly McAllister's memorial estate auction was held. Kelly opened K & M Auctions in 1993 and operated it successfully for 28 years. He also spent a lot of time helping his brother, Mike, at McAllister Auctions. The McAllister boys grew up in the business, with Kelly auctioneering since his teenage years. On this day, brother Greg McAllister had the bitter-sweet job of selling off the items Kelly had accumulated over the years to settle the estate. The entire family was there for the day, sharing stories, laughter and tears. Kelly never became a collector of any one item. He just accumulated things that appealed to him.

"How he got all this stuff into a 750 square foot house, I don't know. And how we got it all out, I don't know," said Greg. Kelly didn't want a funeral. He wanted a time for family and all the friends he had made over the years to get together and enjoy each other. A poem by Nikita Gill was read during the brief memorial service that took place before the auction that summarized the attitude which Kelly carried throughout his life. "I hope you are blessed with a heart like wildflowers. Strong enough to rise again after being trampled upon, tough enough to weather the worst of the summer storms, and able to grow and flourish even in the most broken places."

A Murray fire and rescue pedal car was jokingly sold as "Kelly's first car". This item was rolled away for a bid of $100. A signed 1984 color poster of the Detroit Tigers along with a pennant from the same year sold for $25. A pair of green lamps with beautiful crystals hang-

An oak icebox was in great shape. It brought a bid of $250. An Ethan Allen nightstand rose all the way to $100 before it was pronounced sold. A large primitive jelly cupboard with

Ocarinas have carried a tune for thousands of years

BY LARRY

The ocarina is one of the oldest wind musical instruments known. It is a type of fipple vessel flute (a type of flute with a body which acts as a resonator and a fipple to direct the air at an edge) that typically has 4 – 12 holes, but variations on this number do exist. A mouthpiece projects from the body of the instrument. Traditionally, ocarinas are made of terra cotta clay or ceramic and are ovoid in shape, but many materials have been used, including bone, metal, glass, and wood. The word "ocarina" comes from the Italian word for "little goose."

The first known Ocarina flutes date back 12,000 years ago; however, Oriental cultures, such as China and Japan, and Mesoamerican cultures, such as those found in South America, have long histories of ocarinas being used for song and dance, and these are the cultures that kept ocarina flutes alive for the last few thousand years.

The first record of ocarinas in Europe came after Spanish conquistador Hernán Cortés' expedition to explore the New World.

Both the Aztec and Mayan civilizations used versions of the ocarina in their musical and religious celebrations. Cortés witnessed the Aztecs sing and dance in accompaniment with the ocarina, and he brought the instrument, music, and dance back to Spain. Other European countries quickly copied the ocarinas being made in Spain, and the use of ocarina as a musical instrument spread so quickly that it became known as the toy musical instrument of the European Renaissance.

One of the oldest ocarinas discovered in Europe was found in excavations outside of Runik, Kosovo (formerly part of Serbia).

Above: Vintage, circa 1940s, Gretsch Alto C ocarina with "Music Is Fun" instructional book that is valued at $45.

Runik is the site of an important Neolithic (period dating to the end of the Stone Age, 10,000 – 4,500 BCE) settlement, and excavations there uncovered a baked-clay oca-

Gold and guns brought in the bidders to Schwartz

BY KARIN MILLIMAN

STURGIS, Mich. — Selling off coins and guns proved to be a profitable day for Schwartz Auctions and its consignors. Magnifying eye pieces were out, along with strong lights which allowed the bidders to get up close looks at the coins before they sold. And the rifles were lined up on tables so they could be inspected.

Taking top honors in coins was a $10 1910 Denver minted gold piece. This one was graded MS61 by P.C.G.S., which is one of the top places to get coins graded. An Indian head on the front in full head-dress, is marked underneath with the year of the coin. There are thirteen stars flanking the Indian head. On the back are an eagle side view and the words “ten dollars” and “In God We Trust”. The eagle is standing on a branch with his wings at rest. This one sold for the respectable price of $1,150.

And hanging in there with a sale price right behind the top seller was an 1899 Liberty Head $10 gold eagle coin. These were struck in huge numbers, but many have long since been melted down, so the numbers have significantly diminished. These tiny pieces of history are sought after by both coin collectors and bullion investors because these gold eagles contain a full 0.4896 ounces of gold. The bidding rose quickly to the final price of $875.

A $5 1913 coin was sold for $500. This coin shows an Indian on the front with seven stars running along the right side and six stars on the left. Underneath is the date of 1913. The back side shows the standing eagle with wings at rest and the denomination of the coin.

Dating from 1905 $5 AU coin with an “S” mint mark sold for $475. And right behind that was a $5 gold coin from 1898 which was quickly pocketed away for a bid of $450.

A $5 gold coin from 1881 proved to be a good value as it sold for $425; while a 50-cent piece of

This $10 1910 gold coin took top sales honors at the auction. It sold for $1,150.

An 1899 $10 gold piece reached $875 recently at the Schwartz Auction.

Above: These two images show the front and back of a $5 1913 gold piece. It sold for $500.

California Gold AU from 1871 was sold for $300.

The rifles did well also. A Remington 25-06 rifle almost reached $1,950. Selling for $900

each were a Winchester Model 94-30 WCF lever action rifle and a three-barrel rifle shotgun.

An Ithaca 12-gauge Deerslayer brought a bid of $620. A piece from the past offered for sale was a Francotte Civil War black powder rifle with the bayonet. It was pronounced sold at the bid price of $550. And coming in right behind that was a Remington Model 740-308 which sold for $500.

Selling all by itself was a very nice display cabinet filled with knives. These were all from the North American Hunting Club and looked to be brand new. There was a total of eight knives all a part of the Hunting Heritage Collection. Each blade was engraved beautifully. These were made exclusively for members of the NAHC, some with bone handles. This was a great display piece and sold for $700, complete with the case.

Schwartz Auctions can be reached at 269-651-9261. They also have a website, SchwartzAuctioneers.com.

cupboard with the flour and sugar bins intact was sold for $150.

A grouping of three stackable cast iron plant stands sold for $100. A Victorian lamp table with an etched in flower and horse-shoe design was packed away for a $40 bid. A quarter-sawn library table made of oak sold for $195 and a pair of small round wrought iron tables with removable glass tops were stored away for a bid of $60.

A humidor stand rose all the way to a bid of $140 before the new owner could claim this beautiful piece of history.

One happy bidder was Dennis Nelson. Dennis bid without hesitation on a leather chair with a foot-stool. He just kept nodding as the other bidders dropped out when the price kept going up. It cost Nelson $340 to claim this chair as his own and carefully pack it in the back of his truck for the journey home. This item was made in Denmark by a company called Ekorness. This one was a stressless classic chair from their line in beautiful reddish-brown leather. This company was founded in 1971 and works to make the most comfortable chair on the market to relax in. And according to Nelson, the company has reached this goal. “Hold on to your shorts if you want to buy a new one,” said Nelson. He was very happy with his purchase of the day.

A 16-foot car hauler with a wooden bed was purchased for the bid price of $2,250. The same bidder also bought a 16-foot enclosed trailer and for $900.

and was framed in a vintage frame. “If you went into Kelly’s house, he would always point out this print,” said Greg. He really loved this piece. The final bid price was $50 for this family memory.

Modern European ocarina flutes date to the 1800s when an Italian musician, Giuseppe Donati, transformed a toy ocarina into a modern comprehensive musical instrument.

In 1964, John Taylor, an English mathematician, developed a fingering system that allowed ocarinas to play a full chromatic octave using only four holes. This 4-hole system is now called “the English fingering system,” and it is used extensively for pendant ocarinas that are made to hang from the neck like a pendant or necklace. The English fingering system is also used on multi-chambered ocarinas that are designed to play more than one note at a time.

nas that are designed to play more than one note at a time.

Ocarina flutes feature prominently in NES and Nintendo 64 video games, which may have led to ocarina’s increasing popularity in the 20th century.

Musical collectors began collecting ocarinas because of the different styles and shapes available. The best-known style of an ocarina is the Sweet Potato style, which has a rounded shape and is held in a horizontal position with both hands. Both 10-hole and 12-hole Sweet Potato ocarinas are popular today with musicians and are used as background sound on some records.

Collectors search for vintage ocarinas and those designed as animals or other objects, such as turtles, strawberries, seashells, dragonflies, Dwarf axes, Star Trek Enterprise starships, birds, whales, toucans, and many other shapes.

Along with ocarinas, collectors look for old music books that offer instruction for playing ocarinas. These books are illustrated and show finger placement for different songs. Ocarina instructional manuals add texture to ocarina collections.

Ponytail items were perfect for back to school

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

So, what do ancient Greek women, 1970s male rock stars, and folks who have not visited a hair salon during the pandemic all have in common? It's a ponytail worn high, low, or somewhere in between, pulled up tightly and carefully secured with a rubber band, or casually gathered and held in place with a clip or barrette.

But back in the late 1950s, this popular style was more than just a convenient way to manage long hair. Marking a rite of passage, young girls unbraided their pigtails, gathered their hair into one clump, and anticipated the day when they would become teenagers. Among famous ponytails of the time were the one Sandra Dee sported on the big screen in "Gidget" and the signature topknot worn by Barbie, the doll introduced in 1959 at the New York Toy Fair.

Sensing a trend and seizing an opportunity to capitalize on a new fad, one astute businessman in particular designed "Ponytail" merchandise for discount department stores and dime stores. The target market was junior high school-aged girls. Did these items sell? You bet they did. And are these ponytail-inspired relics still hunted down and collected by nostalgic mid-century collectors? Well, you probably already know the answer to that question.

Although some of the finer points of the history of "Ponytail" have been lost over time, some things are known. There's no disputing the fact that Don Levine was on the cutting edge of this trend. A longtime designer and inspiration for popular toys, Levine was the man who perfected the process of covering cardboard with vinyl, according to Californian Deb Clarke, an avid collector of "retro" artifacts.

Aware of the overnight success of Barbie (and knowing a good thing when he saw it), Levine employed his process to produce vinyl cases that would keep a doll and her wardrobe in one easy-to-carry container. The first doll cases he put on the market were branded, not "Barbie" (which was trademarked), but "Ponytail." His generic figure of a teenage girl had no other name, but it was Above: We'll never know the nature of the first meeting between Ruth Handler, the inspiration for Barbie dolls, and Don Levine, the man who made soft-sided cases to hold fashion dolls. But it's clear that the pair came to an agreement, as witnessed by this collection.

Below: "Jackie," eh? Styles changed in the early 1960s, thanks to iconic trendsetters and hairspray. And ponytails were transformed into bubble cuts. But "Ponytail" lives on.

Decorating with pieces from your academic childhood

That class photo from second grade with your favorite elementary school teacher, your high school yearbook, all of your report cards (even the ones with somewhat embarrassing comments): Letting go of these pieces of childhood is painful, even for the most determined downsizer.

Making this particularly problematic is the fact that these items mean absolutely nothing to anyone but you. So, what to do? As it turns out, you don't need to physically erase 12-plus years of memories. With a bit of creativity, you can still give these relics of earlier times a place of honor in your home. And you might be in good company in doing so.

Using old school desks as occasional tables beside a chair or sofa is nothing new. But to be sure, today's designers have moved on from this. Just thumb through books on modern interiors (for inspiration, I recommend Max Humphrey's "Modern Americana"), and you're bound to see yesteryear's educational tools taking their place in sophisticated room settings. Think "reverse chic" when it comes to incorporating everyday items that were once a part of our everyday school life. Specifically, we're talking old school clocks, wall maps, and handwriting charts.

But wait, there's more! For the past several years, typewriters have experienced a resurgence in popularity in some circles. And even though they might no longer be used for their intended purpose, they still look stylish on a bookshelf. Don't want just another useless gewgaw? Put them to work as attractive bookends.

In an age when most folks depend on an electronic device for navigation, it's heartening to know that old hands-on items still have a purpose, even if it's only decorative (which, come to think of it, isn't all that bad). Remember those pull-down maps in geography class? My cousin (the retired public defender) pointed out to me the other day that, at a young age, we were subliminally taught "what was where" just by glancing at those maps. These days, those that have survived are a quaint and colorful way to fill wall space, never mind the fact that they may no longer be accurate. Similarly, strategically placed three-dimensional globes seem to suggest that worldly people occupy this space.

Then there's the matter of old atlases. And beginning readers. And the aforementioned yearbooks. Do they really warrant shelf space? Call me a heretic, but I'm suggesting that now might be the time to frame specific pages of atlases, readers (sorry, Dick and Jane), and yearbooks. If you're not quite ready to unbind an otherwise useless book (brutal, I know), get copies made of a few interesting pages and frame them. On the other hand, class pictures and report cards might provide conversation starters if framed and displayed. Enjoy them while you have them.

A bit more: Old school pennants never go out of style. Be true to your school and tack them up on a wall where you can see them every day. Although I no longer have my college pennant, I never discarded my old freshman "dink." Thank goodness: What better fashion accessory for my old pal Teddy?

A few parting thoughts. There are limits. No need to display the human skeletons (real or manufactured) that dangled in the front of high school bio classrooms. Dunce caps are another no-no, but as an aside, I'm willing to bet that if I were to ask my grandkids what those pointy hats were used for, they would have absolutely no idea what I was talking about. And hairnets from the cafeteria ladies (think Miss Beazley from Riverdale High) need not be memorialized.

On the other hand, even though I'm not certain that this could ever be verified, I have a feeling that ranking second behind abandoned factories are vacated schoolhouses, now being used as antique shops. Talk about the ultimate repurposing: You can still almost smell the white paste.

Finally, I can't help but wonder what items today's students will want in their homes years from now: Tangled power cords? Broken headphones? Dried-up white board markers?

Preview Wednesday, September 15 from 3pm 6pm
Thursday, September 16 from 9am Noon

We have been commissioned to have an absolute LIVE ON-SITE auction of the entire contents of the former manufacturing facility for KWIK-SITE CORPORATION. KWIK-SITE developed and manufactured some of the finest SEE THROUGH GUN SITES and mounts in the industry for over 50 years. They had contracts with Remington, Mossberg, Smith & Wesson, Winchester as well as military contracts.

The auction is LIVE IN PERSON ONLY (no internet bidding). It is an ABSOLUTE auction with no reserves. Please contact our staff to leave absentee bids. If you would like more pictures of the items, please contact us. Buyers will have until Saturday, September 25 to have items removed from the facility.

BRIEF LISTING

- THOUSANDS OF PACKAGED KWIK-SITE Products including Rifle Mounts, Sites, Etc...
- KWIK-SITE vintage promotional materials and history of the company including SIGNS
- 20 plus Black Powder 50 Caliber Rifles (Some brand new)
- Dozens of pieces of Manufacturing Machinery including Bridgeport, Astro, Jarvis & Clausing Drill Presses, Hydraulic Drill Presses, Lathes, Vibrodome, Aluminum cutting machinery, etc...
- Hundreds of manufacturing tools, drill bits, painting machines, and small hand tools
- Thousands of small screws for gun sites
- Industrial equipment, dozens of Industrial Shelving units, Filing Cabinets, Office furniture, etc...
- Three LARGE Semi Tractor Trailers and a Minivan. There is also quite a bit of SCRAP.

This is just a very brief listing of what is actually going to be at the auction. The building is being sold and everything must go! Please continue to check back with us for updates. Ponytails obvious to even the most casual observer what he had in mind, as evidenced by the four pictured silhouettes of a fashionable teen that could only be Barbie.

Ruth Handler, the “mother” of the Barbie doll, took notice, and she and Levine subsequently came to an agreement, according to Clarke. The results? Levine’s next doll case to hit the market bore not only the word “Ponytail” but also the name “Barbie.” Levine followed up with a case featuring the famous doll in one of her most elegant outfits, a strapless pink evening gown accessorized with a white fur stole (“Enchanted Evening”). As Mattel went on to expand the world of Barbie to include Ken (her beau) and Midge (her gal pal), Levine kept pace with larger cases produced to accommodate these dolls and their accoutrements. Further capitalizing on the popularity of Barbie and her social circle, he introduced various soft-sided lunch boxes.

But Levine did not limit himself to Barbie-related accessories; he designed a full line of personal and school-related “Ponytail” accessories geared to pre-teens, according to collector Jimmie Bucci. Bucci was first drawn to this collecting category several years ago when he spied a bedcover that featured a ’50s teen motif. One thing led to another, and he soon found himself collecting all things “Ponytail.”

The Massachusetts resident’s collection includes an array of “Ponytail” and related items. Bucci said that young girls of the time must have dreamt of living the lifestyle of a teenager: lying on their backs with their feet in the air, wearing pedal pushers, and listening to records, writing letters, and talking on the telephone. Think Ann Margaret in “Bye Bye Birdie,” Bucci suggested.

To be certain, many collectors still seek “Ponytail” soft lunch boxes that survived milk leaks. But other items not exposed to lunchtime spills abound, according to Bucci. They include record cases (“Tune Totes” or “Rhythm Totes”) for 45 rpms (including even one that pictures Pat Boone), scrapbooks, and autograph books. One popular carry-on travel case, the “aviator bag,” came in a variety of colors and featured a picture-within-a-picture of Ponytail waving goodbye while carrying her own miniature Ponytail aviator bag. Banks (“Stash for Cash”) and eyeglass cases are Above: “My Treasures” on the left is signed “Ponytail” and pictures a gal with a ponytail. On the right is a similar accessory, but the teen has a bubble cut, and the box is marked “date line,” perhaps indicating it was made later than the first. Much of the “back story” of Ponytail will probably never be fully known.

Below: Sometimes identified as “date line,” others as “Ponytail,” items such as scrapbooks and photo albums appealed to modern mid-century misses.

collectable, as are soft-sided photo albums and picture frames (“This is Him” included stock photos of Rock Hudson, Frankie Avalon, and others). For the more academically minded preteens, there were pencil cases and pencil holders, desk blotters and dictionaries (“Miss Know It All” by Ponytail). Fold-up locker vanities, marking graduation from elementary school to junior high, were perfect for that between-class touch-up, thanks to a comb and mirror. “My Treasures” boxes (with a key) and diaries (also with a key) suggest that keeping private property private was of the utmost importance, according to Bucci. Collectors continue to look for different products with names other than “Ponytail,” including “Deb-U-Teen” and “date line,” as well as “Siris.” Levine is known to have worked with several manufacturing companies, and these variations seem to be in keeping with licensing agreements made at the time. Not surprisingly, there were also “knock-offs.” Examples of these items in Bucci’s collection (in addition to the aforementioned bedcover) are aprons and flannel yard goods, paper party accessories, and day-of-the-week hankies, as well as figurines.

Later generations would have “Hello Kitty” and Lisa Frank merchandise. But what happened that “Ponytail” faded from view? According to Clarke, the answer probably lies in the fate of the hairdo that started it all. Thanks to new trendsetters, including First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy, as well as hairspray, new bouffant hairdos became popular. In 1962, even Barbie traded in her strapless striped maillot and ponytail for a sleek red bathing suit and a “bubble cut.” And as for Don Levine, he went on to develop more toys. Remember G.I. Joe?

Above: No girl could be without her 45s. One thing that these examples all have in common is that they were made of vinyl-covered cardboard, a process developed by Don Levine.

Below: Entering junior high school was a rite of passage, a world of changing classes, Phys ed uniforms, and lockers.
