ACROSS THE AUCTION BLOCK

Buyers were out: Many vendors had to restock during Midland show

BY KARIN MILLIMAN

MIDLAND, Mich. — The sun came out for the Sept. 25-26 Midland Antiques Festival and both buyers and sellers were ready to go.

"I had to go home and dig way back into my archived items to find product to sell today, said Liz, who is a fixture at the Midland Antique Festival. She sells birdhouses that she constructs herself. And these aren't ordinary birdhouses. She sometimes brings condominiums, some covered in small rocks, some with more than one room for the occupants, and more. She spends her time at home hammering, nailing, painting and crafting to have these sturdy units ready for shows. And they are meant to be displayed outside and used.

"It was an amazing show", said Marty Sizemore. Marty and wife, Denise, always set up with pottery and fine art glass. They have shoppers that look for them in their corner in building two. This year's collection was impressive. After setting up their large display, Marty commented that it took six hours just to get the glass pieces unwrapped and set out. And after two days of selling, they still had to wrap up what was left so it could be carefully transported home to be put back into inventory. They had many beautiful pieces, but a piece of Roseville jumped out. The 1930s jar-

Legend of Stingy Jack leads to a world of decorated pumpkins

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Stingy Jack, also known as Jack the Smith and Jack of the Lantern, is a mythical, Irish character associated with All Hallows Eve (Halloween). The term "Jack-o-Lantern" is derived from the legend of Stingy Jack.

Long ago, there lived a mean, worthless drunkard named Jack the Smith, who was popularly called Stingy Jack. Jack was known throughout all of Ireland as a miserly trickster, who enjoyed playing tricks on everyone he knew, including Satan.

One dark night, Jack tricked Satan into climbing up an old apple tree. Once Satan was high in the branches, Jack quickly placed crucifixes around the tree's trunk, stopping Satan from climbing down. Stingy Jack then forced Satan to promise that he, upon Jack's death, would never take Jack's soul. After making the promise, Jack removed the crucifixes and let the devil go his way.

Below Left: Unusual chalk Jack-o-Lantern, circa 1940, which was probably used as a carnival piece. In excellent condition, this lantern is valued at $475. Below Middle: Moon Face Halloween Parade Jack O'Lantern, circa 1880, which was made in Germany and intended to be carried on a stick with a candle dropped inside during a parade. This rare Halloween treat is valued at $2,875.

Nearly a half century passed, and Jack finally died. When he stood before Saint Peter, at Heaven’s pearly gates, Saint Peter notified Jack that he was too mean and stingy to enter Heaven. Stingy Jack quickly went to Hell and asked Satan for eternal lodging there; however, the devil remembered his promise from 50 years earlier and refused to allow Jack to enter Hell.

Stingy Jack was forced to wander the darkness between Heaven and Hell for eternity because of his trickery and meanness. The devil, perhaps out of pity, gave Stingy Jack an ember from the flames of Hell so that Jack might see his way. Jack placed the ember in a hollowed-out turnip, one of his favorite foods, creating a lantern, which he called “Jack’s Lantern.”

From that day forward, throughout all of eternity, Stingy Jack roams the earth between the planes of Heaven and Hell, lighting his way with his Jack-o-Lantern.

As the story states, the original Jack-o-Lantern was formed by hollowing out a turnip. The Irish also used potatoes, gourds, and rutabagas to hold candles and ward off evil spirits. During the early 1800s, several waves of Irish immigrants landed in America, bringing their customs, including the use of Jack-o-Lanterns, with them. These immigrants discovered that New England-grown pumpkins were larger and easier to carve than a turnip, and the modern Jack-o-Lantern, carved from a pumpkin, was born.

Jack-o-lanterns are chiefly associated with Halloween; however, the carving out of gourds for their use as lanterns dates back thousands of years to Africa. The concept of carving a monstrous face into a pumpkin and placing a lit candle inside to ward off evil spirits, however, is strictly an American concept.

Americans, in 1837, first used the term “jack-o-lantern” when referring to a carved vegetable lantern. In 1866, the carved pumpkin began its official association with Halloween when it was carved and placed on doorsteps to ward off evil spirits.

The jack-o-lantern further became associated with America’s fall festivals when, in 1850, poet John Greenleaf Whittier wrote, “Oh! —fruit loved of boyhood!—the old days recalling./When wood-grapes were purpling and brown nuts were falling!/When wild, ugly faces we carved in its skin,/Glaring out through the dark with a candle within!”

In the mid-1800s, Americans carved pumpkins and placed them on doorsteps on All Hallows’ Eve. The monstrous faces carved into the pumpkins served to ward off evil presences. Believers would also leave a “treat” with the pumpkin, fearing that if a treat were not left, spirits would play “tricks” on one’s home or property. Today this century old concept is known as “trick or treating.”

Jack-o-lantern collectors look for vintage pieces that are in good to mint condition and are unique. Papier-mâché has always been a favorite material for collectible Jack-o-lanterns. Other materials used, in combination with papier-mâché, for eyes and teeth include glass, plastic, and paper. It is not uncommon for papier-mâché jack-o-lanterns to date to the latter half of the 19th century. Tin, ceramic, cardboard, and crepe paper have also been used to manufacture jack-o-lanterns.

Jack-o-lantern collectibles take on many forms, such as candy boxes, noisemakers, cookie jars, glass lanterns, pumpkin torches, rattles, and pull string jumping jacks. While many collections center on vintage candy pails, especially the type that children used as candy holders while trick or treating, the list of possible jack-o-lantern items is nearly endless.

Many vintage papier-mache jack-o-lanterns show signs of repair since papier-mache is easily repairable. Don’t get caught up in another of Jack’s tricks; watch for reproductions when buying jack-o-lanterns.

Antique, jack-o-lantern made from a gourd. This quirky Halloween lantern was offered on eBay for $60.

Jack-Lantern noisemaker, made in Germany circa 1920, with cardboard head and wooden body. This rare lantern is valued at $850.

Below: Vintage, watermelon jack-o-lantern, solid composition, that is valued at $1,200. Note the paper inserts for eyes, nose, and teeth.

Below: Lithograph Halloween jack-o-lantern mask, circa 1900, that is valued at $100.

Rare, McCoy Jack-o-Lantern cookie jar, marked “McCoy USA” on bottom, which is valued at $600.

Rare, jack-o-lantern and witch noisemaker, Made in Germany, with wooden ratchet, that is valued at $175.

Ransomware attack impacts online auction sites

BY MICHELE F. MIHALJEVICH

LINCOLN, Neb. – Customers of several auction companies couldn't view items online or place bids after a ransomware attack earlier this month. The attack against Sandhills Global started Oct. 1 and was resolved by Oct. 4, according to auction companies impacted by the incident.

Sandhills Global, an information processing company based in Lincoln, hosts several auction websites, including HiBid, TractorHouse and LivestockMarket.com.

In a statement, Sandhills Global said systems and operations were temporarily shut down during the attack to protect data and information. "We have retained cybersecurity experts to assist us with the investigation (into the attack), which is ongoing. At this time we are continuing to investigate whether any of our client's information has been accessed or impacted by this incident. At this time, we have not discovered evidence that confirms that customer information has been compromised. Please know that our clients are our number one priority and we are working diligently to restore operations and remediate the attack."

A representative of Walther & Hawkins Auctioneers, based in Centerville, Ind., said the company began experiencing problems with its website Oct. 1.

"People weren't able to bid," she noted. "We like for people to be able to see items on the weekend. The site was back up on Monday (Oct. 4)."

In an email to customers, B&H Auction, of Danville, Va., said its online auctions weren't accessible as a result of the attack. The attack brought down "the bidding platform and (affected) thousands of auction companies and bidders throughout the United States and Canada. We value you as customers and appreciate your patience in this unfortunate situation."

B&H said in fairness to bidders and consigners, it would suspend a couple of auctions until online bidding was again available.

In a video posted on YouTube Oct. 2, Jason Deel, founder of JD's Realty & Auction, of Clinton, Tenn., said, "(HiBid) is down nationwide. We've got six or seven auctions going on right now. So don't panic. There's nothing you guys can do about it. Just kind of be patient. The auctions aren't going to close, they're just kind of paused, if you will. You can't search for anything, you can't check your bids, you can't really do anything to the point we can't either."

Two days later, Deel said in another video his website was back up and working, adding some auction dates were being adjusted.

Attempts to Sandhills Global, B&H and Deel for additional comments were unsuccessful.

While the auction sites were down, some people on Facebook expressed confusion, and frustration they couldn't access items up for bid.

On HiBid's page, one comment read, "Can't bid if your website is down all day. Are you going to make a statement about what's going on? What about auctions we had bids on that ended in this shutdown?"

A poster on the TractorHouse page complained he had paid for an advertisement no one could see. Another wrote, "Maybe you should fix your website." Another asked, "Has your website been hacked or what?"

dinière and pedestal were in the Peony pattern showing off bold colors of green, white and yellow. It was priced to sell at just $400.

Vendor Frank Mathison, who is a subscriber of The Auction Exchange & Collectors News, had a unique item right at the front of his booth. “I’m kind of embarrassed today because there’s hardly anything left in my booth,” said Frank’s wife. But this one item was worth the look. It was an orange Hudson Hawk car. This one was an old carnival ride and Mathison had it priced at $1,250. The seat and the floors were made of wood and the steering wheel appeared to be original. This one couldn’t be driven – only ridden. So, it would be a great memory item for anyone who remembers taking a ride in one of these fancy little cars when the circus or fair came to town.

And if you parked in the back of the fairgrounds or walked to see all the vendors set up out there, you would run across a real memory maker. The Good Humor man was there! Yes, an actual man wearing one of the vintage blue shirts, white pants and hat we all remember. This Good Humor ice cream piece of history was from 1969. Randy and Pam Oleynik purchased the vintage truck in 2016. It took them three years to restore it and they sold ice cream out of it in 2019 for the first time. Then covid hit and they were sidelined like the rest of us. But they are excited to have this fun history machine back out at shows. And yes, they sell ice cream from it.

Ann Gianopoulos specializes in Halloween and Christmas and is very popular at this show. She hails from Pontiac, Mich., and spends the year getting ready for these two year-ending holidays. Gianopoulos has some unique ideas and fills her booth with great holiday décor items. Her lighted witches are some of her most popular items. Some of them light up and others are wearing your favorite team witches’ outfits so would make some unique gifts. “I had to dig out some more items to refill my booth for today,” said Ann. What a wonderful problem for these vendors to have at this show.

And you’ve heard of pigs’ flying? Well, how about pigs’ rolling. A very unusual pig carriage for a doll just beckoned you to get a closer look. The pigs’ head was at the front of this small display piece. Still showing the original tag, this piece was imported by All Continental Inc., out of Kent, Washington. This hand-crafted piece was advertised that it would only get better with “natural aging and change”. “The characteristics mature in a response to temperature and humidity”. The tag goes on further to say that if cracks or flaws appear over time; it is not a flaw in the item or the workmanship. This would make a unique piece for display with a small doll sitting inside the carriage. It was priced at $45 by vendor Gina, who drove from Armada, Mich., to sell at this show.

“I had to bring in more boxes today, said vendor Dan Bills, from Waterford, Mich. This was my “best first day ever”. He commented that the crowd was steady, and they were spending money. Bills had several vintage cookies jars in his booth. A Woody Woodpecker piece had a great whimsical look. With no chips or cracks, the asking price of $225 seemed reasonable. Walter Lantz is the person always associated with Woody Woodpecker. This ceramic cookie jar from the 1950s was made by the Norcrest Grantcrest Company. Woody is sitting with his mixing bowl and spoon, mixing up a batch of cookies.

Be sure to put the Michigan Antique Festivals on your calendar for 2022 go to www.MiAntiqueFestival.com.

Below: This Hudson Hawk was part of a carnival ride from the 1950s. It was priced $1,250.

Below: These witches were all priced at $65 in the earlie booth of Ann Gianopoulos, who came prepared for Halloween.

Below: This pig wouldn’t fly, but he could roll along with a fun-loving doll seated in the carriage.
