ACROSS THE AUCTION BLOCK

Flower Children blossomed to $37,500 at Rachel Davis

BY SUSAN

NUTTER

CLEVELAND, Ohio
— European, American, and Asian paintings, as well as prints, and sculpture spanning the 19th to 21st centuries were up for grabs during Rachel Davis Fine Arts March 19 online-only event. Auctioner and gallery owner, Rachel Davis, has made a name for herself in northeast Ohio and beyond presenting such events comprised of a nice mix that appeals to collectors' differing tastes.

The top lot of this March sale was The Flower Children by American artist Roger Medearis (1920-2001). Known for his works using egg tempera and acrylic on canvas, this work followed suit and was then laminated to a Masonite hardboard panel. Dated 1969 and signed "Medearis" at lower right, the framed 28 by 40 inch painting sold with three preliminary sketches; one being a drawing, another a tone sketch, and lastly, a color sketch. All three sketches were signed with each measuring 16 by 22 inches framed. This lot brought $37,500 and came to auction from a private Cleveland collection. Prices do not include a buyer's premium.

Collectors take a shot at collecting whiskey jugs

BY LARRY
LEMASTERS

Images of men chugging whiskey from a stoneware jug held by one finger on their shoulders are mostly Hollywood fabrications that look good in a manly movie but would have spilled a lot of whiskey in real life. And whiskey was too valuable of a commodity to pour down the front of your shirt showing off. The one thing about these images that is true is the fact that whiskey once was sold in large, stoneware jugs that are now highly collectible.

The heyday of stoneware jugs was 1861-1881 when more stoneware was produced than at any other time. By 1920, the stoneware business in America was largely finished, especially since the passage of Prohibition in 1919 ended the need for stoneware beer bottles and whiskey jugs.

Of all the stoneware items produced, people recognize stoneware whiskey jugs most often. Whiskey jugs have a universal appeal and whiskey sales have always played a large part in our country's economy.

Collectors like the quaint, homey appeal that fat, stoneware whiskey jugs provide. Few items scream Americana like a whiskey jug. And the market has been a seller's dream for many years since authentic, high-quality stoneware whiskey jugs have not been produced for nearly 100 years, and many of the ones produced before 1920 have long since been destroyed.

jugs are made from gray and tan clays that vitrify in strong heat to form a nonporous base. Glazing was produced by tossing a handful of table salt into the kiln, producing the pebbly surface common on the bottom of most jugs.

While a few American stoneware whiskey jugs were produced prior to the American Revolution, place to snag works by Ohio native Clyde Singer (1908-1999). The oil on canvas titled, Jim, and dated 1936 sold within estimate when it brought $24,000. “The sitter in the painting is Jim Loby who was a frequent model for Singer in Malvern, Ohio,” Davis said. This work came to auction from a private North Olmstead, Ohio, collection, and had been acquired directly from the artist.

Keeping with the Ohio artist theme, a Cleveland, Ohio-born, Frank Wilcox (1887-1964) watercolor on illustration board titled Bonaventure Island made $4,750. Described as the “Dean of Cleveland School painters,” Wilcox taught at the Cleveland School of Art (now Cleveland Institute of Art or CIA) for more than 40 years. “The artist’s grandson confirmed the authenticity of this work,” Davis said.

Stepping away from the states, 17 collotype plates from “A Book of Cats”, 1929, by artist Leonard Tsuguharu Foujita (French/Japanese, 1886-1968) sold for $13,000. Signed in pencil, the 10 by 13 inch sheets were marked ‘Made in France.’

An untitled etching with aquatint in colors by Zao Wou-Ki (Chinese, 1921-2013) dated 1968 did well when it brought $7,000. The colorful image was 21 by 27 inches and was numbered 15/95.

Works by living artists also sold strong. The untitled monumental aluminum and resin sculpture with multiple pieces by American sculpture, Don Drumm (1935- ), was bid to $7,500. The approximate size of the sculpture can be best appreciated knowing the central piece is 58 inches high by 82 inches wide by 8 inches deep.

And the gorgeous watercolor on paper by Gary Bukovnik (American, 1947- ) done in

Whiskey jugs

the vast majority was produced in the second half of the 19th century. However, age and even rarity does not necessarily indicate the value of a jug today since, on the whole, America’s stoneware quality improved greatly as the 19th century wore on, so-much-so, in fact, that whiskey jugs of 1850 and later are far superior in craftsmanship than those prior to 1850.

While some old stoneware whiskey jugs employed incised decoration or applied relief decoration, most of these old jugs were simply decorated with stenciling, and the majority of the stenciling was simply the whiskey manufacture’s name and township. Stenciling dates the majority of the whiskey jugs from 1840 onward when stenciling became the preferred method of decoration on most stoneware. The heyday for stenciling stoneware was 1880-1920 when large portions of all stoneware were stenciled. The stencil was placed against the whiskey jug and a stenciling brush dipped in cobalt was patted against the stenciling.

Stoneware whiskey jugs generally range in size from pint size to 4-gallon size, which is a large whiskey jug. And the common design of a whiskey jug was a broad-bottom, narrowing to a small neck and opening. The mouth on most whiskey jugs was for pouring, but as we all have seen in the movies, when a stoneware whiskey jug had a finger hole handle, a drinker could flip the entire jug on his shoulder and drink straight from the jug’s mouth.

Many of the eastern potteries produced stoneware whiskey jugs for distilleries around the country, stenciling the distilleries name on the jug, so pinpointing the exact manufacturer of a whiskey jug can be difficult.

The chief interest for collectors of stoneware whiskey jugs is not the shape but the decoration or, rather, the stenciled name and town. Some whiskey jugs are highly decorated such as those made by Joseph Remmey of South Amboy, New Jersey, who, around 1825, used three upright stalks of corn to decorate his jugs that held corn whiskey.

The condition of a stoneware whiskey jug (as it is for all stoneware pieces) is critical in determining its value. Jugs with major cracks, chips, or noticeable repairs are nearly worthless; however, seldom does an old whiskey jug find its way into today’s secondary market without either production flaws or age-related flaws or both. During the firing process, pebble bursts or stacking problems in the kiln lead directly to production flaws. Many jugs that were damaged in firing were sold as “seconds” or even “thirds,” which, if the buyer used the jug for its intended purpose, he seldom noticed the flaws. Kiln and firing related flaws actually have little influence on the jugs value.

Collectors can also look for stoneware whiskey jugs that are of historic value if the jug is rare or the pottery is of some historic interest.

Produced as utilitarian objects, stoneware whiskey jugs, when damaged, were usually thrown away, so the ones surviving tend to be of good quality for the most part.

In collecting stoneware whiskey jugs, it is best for beginning collectors to look for jugs that are relatively inexpensive, such as a Jack Daniels jug, which adds character and charm to a collection without costing so much that it drives the collector to drink.

Nippon collectors ready to be back for convention

COLUMBUS, Ohio — After an unfortunate two-year pandemic hiatus, Nippon collectors from around the world are ready to rock at their annual convention. Held August 10-13, at the Embassy Suites Hotel in Columbus, Ohio, this year's theme will be Nippon Rocks and there will be no shortage of quality Nippon at this four-day event.

On the agenda are two days of educational programs, collector displays, panel discussions, and so much more. Additionally, Angie Becker of the Antiques & Collectibles Insurance Group will discuss how to insure your collection.

Along with these informative programs and the in-room buying and selling, a highlight is the annual auction to be held on Saturday, August 13, which is open to the public with online bidding available through liveauctioneers.com. The auction, managed by Forsythes' Auctions of Russellville, Ohio, is always an exciting end to the convention and this year will be no exception.

The International Nippon Collectors Club (INCC) convention is definitely the best Nippon marketplace in the world where collectors and dealers will have a chance to buy and sell all varieties of Nippon porcelain; there's something to suit every taste, pocketbook, and collecting level from novice to advanced. If you're a collector of Nippon, this is the place to be.

For more information about the International Nippon Collectors Club (INCC) and the convention, go to www.nipponcollectorsclub.com or join us on Facebook at www.facebook.com/groups/nipponcollectorsclubgroup.

Clinch River show back after two year hiatus

BY ERIC C. RODENBERG

CLINTON, Tenn. – Despite a Spring that has been capricious across much of the United States, in Tennessee the red buds and dogwoods are blooming, temperatures are edging up into the 80s; and best of all the Clinch

River Spring Antique Fair is back in action.

On May 6 and 7 the 17th annual Clinch River Spring show is expected to bloom along with the surrounding flora and fauna.

The show is expected to have more than 60 well-vetted antique dealers selling on the streets. This is in addition to the many antique stores throughout the town that will be selling until the later hours.

“It’s been something missing in our town for two years,” says Angela Galen, who is the president of The Antique Merchants Guild of Clinton, Tennessee,

“and just think we would be having the 19th anniversary this year. That’s a long-running show. I look forward to a great show.”

Angela and her husband, Glen, own The Antique Market, one of the many antique stores in towns. Bolstering the area’s appeal, according to Galen is the diversified number of fine dining establishments in the community.

“We’ll have a little over everything,” Galen says.” We have a new more formal store with some very nice earlier English and French pieces, we have a clock shop, there’s an antique mall, and some of what the vendors bring in is incredible. It’s going to be a great day.”

Above: One of the first sure signs of Spring is the annual Clinch River Spring Antique Fair in the Historical Downtown of Clinton, Tennessee (about 20 miles northeast of Knoxville). The 2-day festival begins at noon on May 6 until 8 p.m., followed by a full day on May 7.

Hadley Pottery closing its doors after 80 years

BY SUSAN EMERSON NUTTER

The pandemic and inflation continue to take its toll on many aspects of life. For the M. A. Hadley Pottery of Louisville, Kentucky, sadly it means the closing of the company.

For more than 80 years, this family-owned operation has been crafting highly collectible decorative earthenware pieces, that unlike many such items; were still being actively acquired by those who love the ware.

The company broke the news at the end of March via their Facebook page, telling their customers, “THANK YOU, THANK YOU for your outstanding and remarkable loyalty over the years,” adding, “We were here all this time because of you.”

The culprit behind the closure, not unlike what many businesses are facing, is the high cost of materials coupled with costly machine repairs and replacements with the post explaining, “it has become impossible for us to continue for the Above: What a great set of vintage M.A. Hadley Pottery. Known as “All Gone,” the owner of the set, Bethany Orlemann of Los Angeles, California states, “All the pieces in the set wear an original Mary Alice pre-1965 mark.” The 9 inch plate depicts a house and is signed by the M.A. Hadley. “This information was verified by the former head potter at the Hadley Pottery in Louisville, Kentucky via email correspondence,” Orlemann points out. The 5 1/2 inch bowl with the car/boat/anchor motif and “All Gone” written on the bottom is signed by one of M.A. Hadley’s painters as per the head potter. And the 4 inch tall mug with a house motif on one side and a boat on the other; again with “All Gone” written on the bottom inside the mug was signed by a M.A. Hadley painter. Orlemann states, “These were a gift given to my mother for me when I was born in 1970, so all the pieces are at least 50 years old.” The set is currently for sale on eBay for $60.

And what a long run!

It’s not surprising the beginnings of what would become the M. A. Hadley Pottery Company originated in the Louisville, Kentucky, area. Ancient clay deposits were – and still are - commonplace there. It only made sense potteries would spring up in the area since this natural resource was so readily available.

Born into a family of clay tile makers who lived and worked in the Louisville area in the early 1900s, Mary Alice Hadley came to pottery-making honestly, but that was not where she started. Instead, her earliest interests centered around art and design, eventually leading her to become a well-known painter garnering numerous awards along the way.

It’s easy to predict

Hadley’s artistic abilities and her knowledge of pottery-making would eventually meet up. That took place in 1939, as the story goes, when Hadley created a set of custom dishes for her houseboat on the Ohio River.

Interestingly, Mary Alice fired these first pieces at the Louisville Pottery Company of Louisville, Kentucky; a pottery that would be a competitor when Mary Alice opened her own company several years later. Still in operation in Louisville and now known as Louisville Stoneware – this pottery continues to produce highly collected decorative and utilitarian ware.

Mary Alice worked for and was considered one of Louisville Pottery’s best potters around the time she created these first dishes for her houseboat. The houseboat dishes Hadley designed with nautical flags were so well-received by friends and family, an “A-ha!” moment occurred resulting in what would become the M. A. Hadley Pottery Company.

Making ware to satisfy her family and friends requests resulted in Hadley’s pottery reaching a wider audience. Orders for more became commonplace, and a business was born. In 1940, just a year after she made that original set of dishes, the M. A. Hadley Pottery Company was a go.

Besides the talent Hadley, herself, brought to the endeavor, Perry Day, a former Louisville Pottery mold maker and master potter in his own right, came on board. Day was hired by Hadley Pottery to oversee the manufacturing side of the business. With Hadley creating the artwork and Day designing the pottery, this dynamic duo became unstoppable.

With so much success and so many order coming in from across the

Below: The same collector selling the quail figures has some favorite M.A. Hadley Pottery pieces she plans to pass down to her daughters with this cowboy mug being one of those. She states, “The cowboy mug is just super to look at with the brand on the backside of the mug.”

Collectors can get their 2 cents in with these coins

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Collectors love the 2-cent coin. It was the first U.S. coin to bear the motto “In God We Trust,” and it takes only 10 coins to have a complete set since Philadelphia was the only U.S. Mint to ever produce 2-cent coins. The first

2-cent coin was minted in 1864 and the last in 1873, and some, although often not many, were minted in every year in between. Even the size of this coin seems special since it is roughly the size of a modern quarter

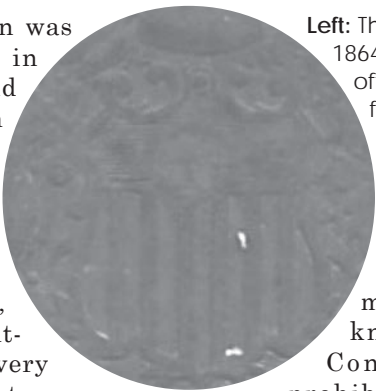

Made of 95 percent copper with a small amount of tin and zinc for strength, this double “copper” coin introduced religion into American coins. As most of you know, the Constitution prohibits any legalization of religion; however, the term “In God We Trust” did exactly that. According to Frank Ross (Hobbies magazine, May 1952), this “religious motto owes its presence largely to the increased religious sentiment in the dreaded crisis of the Civil War.” Supposedly, S.P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury in 1864, received a number of “public appeals suggesting and urging that God be recognized suitably on our coins in a manner similar to that commonly the Small Motto and Large Motto coins of 1864. The Small Motto is rarer and more valuable. Collectors also look for doubled dies, die cracks, and other minting errors in this series since damaged coins, in 1864, often made their way into circulation.

Left: Proposed 1836 2-cent piece pattern that ultimately was rejected.

Left: This Large Motto 1864 2-cent coin, offered on eBay for $7, is in poor condition, which is how many of these coins appear.

Above: Shield side or Obverse side of 1864 2-cent piece—note “In God We Trust” motto; about $10 in good condition.

Kudos go out to Mary Alice’s husband, George, who took her home business to the next level. As a birthday present, George Hadley bought a building on Story Avenue in the Butchertown area of Louisville in 1944 so the company could expand.

The building built in 1848 had always been used by some sort of manufacturing. It was a woolen mill, a candle factory, and a cordage mill. For the past 78 years, it has housed all aspects of production, acted as the factory salesroom, and was the headquarters of the M. A. Hadley Pottery Company.

What made Hadley Pottery so desirable was truly the artwork Mary Alice created for the ware. Animals were a staple – be it a horse, turkey, cow, sheep or cat. Ships are a favorite motif, just like houses, holiday images, and people.

The variety of ware is equally as extensive and impressive. There is a nativity set and candlesticks. Mugs, lidded casseroles, salt and pepper shakers, wall pockets and cake covers. Pieces could be custom ordered. They could be personalized. One could buy sets or single items. M. A. Hadley Pottery made something for everyone’s tastes and interests.

As with anything, time marches on and in 1965, Mary Alice passed away. Her husband continued to run the business, deciding to step aside in 1979 when he sold the pottery to Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth W. Moore, also of Louisville.

In September of 2009,

Below: This lot of three M. A. Hadley Pottery pineapple wall hangings are hard to come by, and recently sold out of a Florida collection via eBay for $100.

Above: This Hadley Pottery nativity set was reduced in price after the 2021 Christmas season with pieces ranging from $22.50 to $55.25 as seen on the company’s Facebook page.

the Moores brought new partners into the ownership group. In 2018, the pottery was sold to the Day family; who were distant relatives of Hadley Pottery’s master potter, Perry Day.

A quick perusal of eBay listings finds many pieces up for grabs, and most are finding new owners at a rapid pace.

Collectors should know, though the pottery is closed; the outlet store is open and will remain so probably until the end of 2022 or until the inventory of items to sell is depleted.

It is not yet known what will become of the actual building that housed the pottery. Currently, pieces of original art by Mary Alice are still on display on the walls. Several large murals Mary Alice completed over the course of the pottery’s history also decorate walls in the structure.

Current owner, Jerry Day says the historic M

A Hadley Pottery’s outlet shop will remain open for customers “until the last piece is gone.” Collectors should also continue to visit the pottery’s Facebook page during this final transition. Hadley Pottery plans to feature several older pieces there, and those items will be put up for sale.

Visit <https://www.facebook.com/Hadley-Pottery> for the opportunity to add just one more iconic piece of Mary Alice Hadley pottery to your collection.

Above: Figurines are a popular Hadley Pottery offering. This pair of quail figures are priced $69 on eBay right now. The seller, a collector now living in Tampa, Florida, said, “For me, the fun of collecting Hadley Pottery pieces began years ago when I lived in Wichita, Kansas. The pottery was sold at Macy’s there.”

Below: This vintage bride and groom candlesticks by M. A. Hadley Pottery stand 6 inches tall and are for sale on eBay priced $15.50 by a collector from Crown Point, Indiana. The seller notes, “I had 91 pieces of Hadley pottery and have sold more than half of these in auction lots on eBay in the past two weeks. The items are selling as fast as I can list them. These have become a very hot item since the factory closing.”

Left: Found on the M.A. Hadley Facebook page, this image shows a young Mary Alice Hadley hard at work creating pieces of the pottery; now valued by collectors world-wide.

Below: This set of six M. A. Hadley plates showing a farming husband and wife pair and several farm animals was made between 1970-1979. The set is currently up for grabs on eBay for $129.
