Tall ships dropped anchor at the Cleveland waterfront

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

CLEVELAND, Ohio — It was the romance of the sea on the Cleveland waterfront July 7-10. The four-day maritime Tall Ships festival made its second stop along the Great Lakes. Visitors could view, go aboard, and even sail on a fleet of seven classically-rigged replica and restored ships from the U.S., Canada, and Spain.

The Cleveland event was one of a series promoted by Tall Ships America. The non-profit, founded in Newport, Rhode Island, in 1973 focuses on youth education and leadership development through maritime education and preservation. Its mission is to, "Encourage character building through sail training, promote sail training to the North American public, and support education under sail." The U.S. Congress officially recognized Tall Ships America as the national sail training organization representing the United States.

Tall Ships America works with over 100 tall ship operators, and with host ports in the Great Lakes, and the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States and Canada. In addition to sponsoring maritime festivals like Cleveland's, the organization holds sailing races, cruises, and educational events. Vessels are often crewed by young people and adults engaged in sail training programs, under the supervision of captains and professional crewmembers.

Cleveland's festival began with a dramatic Parade of Sail on Thursday evening, when the vessels arrived under full sail at the Cleveland Harbor, crewed in part by student mariners aged

Courtland left little history; but plenty of toys

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Although much of the 20th century was captured in more media hype than any other time in history, some things, considered unimportant by social historians, have been lost forever. The history and social significance of some 20th century toy manufacturers is a case in point.

American toy manufacturers sprang up following World War I and World War II. As peace dawned on America's horizon, toy manufacturers saw the eagerness of children's desires as a kind of financial strategy for the future. Such a company was Courtland Manufacturing Company, better known as Courtland Toys (research has failed to reveal why the company's name was "Courtland").

Walter Rudolph Reach is credited with founding Courtland Toys in 1944 in Camden, New Jersey. In many ways, this is all that is known of this once prosperous company. History has revealed few facts of Courtland's existence. O'Brien's Collecting Toys is considered the Bible among some collectors for referencing obscure toy companies, yet almost no mention of Courtland Toys is found in O'Brien's.

One interesting piece of history is found in a 1947 Camden, New Jersey, Courier Post newspaper article, telling of an uncontrolled fire that swept through Courtland Manufacturing Company's warehouse located at 215-221 Kaighn Avenue in Camden. The fire raged unchecked for three hours, destroying the building and all of its contents, and the fire department stated, "The building will be torn down as a safety precaution."

Erwin Reach, manager of Courtland Toy Company announced, "some $200,000 worth of toys, stored in the warehouse for Christmas, were completely destroyed by fire, smoke, and water."

Research revealed that Erwin Reach was the fireworks at the harbor, illuminating the ship masts.

Tall Ships

The lineup of tall ships was impressive. The local favorite was the U.S. Brig Niagara, an accurate reproduction of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry’s victorious flagship at the Battle of Lake Erie during the War of 1812. Maryland’s Pride of Baltimore II drew a similar crowd. The replica 1812 Baltimore Clipper replaced the earlier Pride, sadly lost to a storm off Puerto Rico in 1986.

Also docked was the NAO Trinidad, a replica of Ferdinand Magellan’s flagship during the first circumnavigation of the globe 525 years ago. Next to it sat The Empire Sandy, a 200-foot topsail schooner, built in England in 1943 and which now calls Canada home.

Included with the ticket was boarding on Cleveland’s museum ship William G. Mather, a 618-foot Great Lakes freighter built in 1925. Visitors could tour the freighter from stern to stern, seeing the cargo holds, pilot house, elegant guest quarters, crew areas, and four-story engine room. Entrance to another museum ship - the World War II era USS Cod submarine - was also included. Plus, the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Hollyhock made a port call and was open periodically for tours.

A limited number of 75-minute day sails and 2-hour twilight sails were available at extra cost aboard a selection of smaller traditionally-rigged sailing vessels. Two that sailed were Bay City Michigan’s 85-foot Appledore IV schooner and Sutton Bay Michigan’s 77-foot Inland Seas.

Complementing the ship lineup was a multitude of food trucks, vendors, and artisans offering everything from face painting to festival-themed merchandise. Notably under-represented were maritime-themed crafts - and absent were dealers selling any kind of nautical antiques. Only two vendors had maritime merchandise. One of them was the sponsor; the other operated from a mobile boutique bedecked like a pirate ship. Both offered strictly new merchandise. Event sponsors seem to be receptive to potential new vendors, pointing to opportunities for nautical and related antiques and collectibles dealers to participate in the next show (scheduled for 2025).

Tall Ships continues its 2022 season in Bay City, Michigan July 23-24, Two Harbors, Minnesota, August 4-7, and Erie, Pennsylvania, August 25-28.

Courtland

father of Walter Reach, who was born in 1905. Since Erwin is indicated as the manager of the company, perhaps Walter was not the official founder of Courtland Toys. It is known that Walter married a woman named Marie, but children from that union could not be found either, so the exact family history involved with Courtland Toys is unknown.

It is known that sometime after the fire, Courtland Toys was relocated to Philadelphia. The fire and loss of merchandise and building may have led directly to the relocation of the company.

History does indicate Courtland Toys began by making die-cut cardboard/wooden toys, using lithographed paper images on the thick cardboard. Courtland's first two toys were a die-cut cardboard rabbit and cart and a die-cut horse and cart, which are both highly collectible today.

1944 was a tough year to open a toy company; although, with the war's end hopefully in sight, the future must have looked bright for the company. Unfortunately the only material available for toys was cardboard, since metal and even wood materials were still being used strictly for the war effort.

Following the war, Courtland immediately began manufacturing tin toys with color-lithographed images. In the later years of the 1940s and early 1950s, tin toys were the rage, especially as Japan entered the tin toy market in an attempt to raise its productivity to pre-war heights.

As tin toys became Courtland's stock and trade, many of them had wind-up mechanisms (motors) in them to make the toy move. At the height of Courtland's popularity, roughly 1947 – 1948, the company's sales surpassed $1.5 million, and the company employed over 600 workers.

After nearly 80 years, Internet auction sites such as eBay, are full of Courtland toy trucks in excellent condition that are relatively inexpensive to buy, making Courtland toys fabulous collectibles. If you are tempted to pay top dollar for a Courtland toy truck, make sure the wind-up mechanism still works.

The majority of Courtland's toy trucks have the Courtland logo on them, making field identification quite easy. Most often the logo was stenciled on the truck's cab doors.

Courtland did its best to manufacture toys that would last. Each toy truck with a wind-up mechanism came with a Motor Guarantee: “If the motor of this toy should ever cease to operate in a satisfactory manner, remove and return the motor to the factory with 15¢ to cover cost of handling, packing, and shipping. We will either put this motor in working condition or replace it with a new motor.”

There is no doubt that Walter Reach had a vision. Like many mid-century toy makers, his toy designs and determination made him a leader in America's toy markets. Reach directly competed against J. Chein and Louis Marx, among others, as the largest producers of tin lithographed toys in the 1950s.

Courtland Manufacturing Company closed its doors in 1954.
