Baby buggy museum auction sewed up some nice bids

BY SUSAN EMERSON NUTTER

MARIETTA, Ohio - Perambulators. Now there's a word not often spoken in this day and age. Unless, of course, you are Andrew Richmond, owner of The Ohio Company Antiques & Arts organization. He and his crew just tackled the monumental task of dispersing the Victorian Perambulator Museum of Jefferson, Ohio.

About a third of the contents of the museum crossed the auction block Wednesday, September 21, during the online only event. The second auction to disperse the remaining items from the Victorian Perambulator Museum of Jefferson, Ohio will take place early in 2023.

"There might even be a third," Richmond said. "In order to be fair to the consignors, it is not ideal for all of this material to come on the market at once. Collectors only have so much money to spend at one time, so we are spreading out the contents probably over three auctions.

This is a total liquidation, though, and, "The logistics of even simply making room in order to walk and take photos was daunting," Richmond explains. "The amount of items was; still is, substantial. Cataloging was quite an undertaking, but it was also exciting to see what was uncovered."

Included in the auction were hundreds of perambulators aka baby carriages from the 19th and 20th centuries, as well as hundreds of dolls along with thousands of child-related items. Though the slew of baby carriages was said to be the best collection ever assembled, the perambulators did not lead the auction.

That honor went to the Tulley's Patent, July 3, 1883, "Little Daisy" child's sewing machine that sold

Superman comic books still flying high after 84 years

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Although hard to believe, Superman turned 84 years old in 2022. Writer Jerry Siegel created Superman for Action Comics, and artist Joe Shuster gave Superman his outlandish superhero costume. Wearing red, white, and blue, including a flashy red cape, Superman fights evil with extraordinary abilities. DC Comics published other superheroes prior to Superman's appearance, but it was Superman who popularized the superhero genre and established its conventions.

Superman debuted in Action Comics on April 18, 1938 after arriving on earth as an infant from his home planet of Krypton. Named Kal-El as a baby and knowing he would need a disguise, Superman posed as Clark Kent, a mild-mannered reporter during the day.

Kal-El took the name "Kent" from his adoptive parents, John and Mar-for $1,920. Made by the Daisy Manufacturing Company of Cleveland, Ohio, this little gem wore a serial number of 3087. It had a cast iron base with a walnut work surface and a walnut cover which sported a burl walnut panel. The 20.5 inch high machine even retained its original gold decoration on the frame.

Other sewing related lots also did well. A J.P. Coats six-drawer spool cabinet doubled its high estimate when it sold for $960 (est. $200-$400). Having embossed inserts and an embossed and painted advertising panel, this cabinet measured 22 inches high by 26 inches wide and 19 inches deep.

Another sewing lot, this being a collection of sewing items that included thimbles, thimble cases, needle cases, button hooks, and more, made from various materials, including bone, tagua nut, and a few pieces of sterling silver sold together with an Asian sewing basket with beaded decoration for $720.

Like most auctions there were surprises. The lot garnering the second highest sale price had nothing to do with anything child-related. Up for grabs was a large collection of smoking pipes made of various materials and included carved wood and meerschaum examples. Some even sold with cases. The grouping soared to $1,800 against an estimate of $30 to $60. At least two people obviously knew there were some excellent examples in the mix!

Another lot of pipes selling with a hanging pipe rack and a figural pipe stand also did well, when the high bidder offered up $720 (est. $40-$80) for the grouping.

“Yes, the items in the auction were from the Victorian Perambulator Museum, but this museum was a personal collection so not everything had to do with baby carriages, and the pipes were an example of this,” Richmond pointed out.

Sewing items and pipes aside, this is not to say baby carriages did not sell strong at this September event. A fantastic wicker rocking horse carriage came in at $1,680. Retaining its original white paint and wicker cab, the cabriolet-style carriage boasted a hide-covered mechanical horse that moved when the carriage’s front wheel turned.

Adding to this carriage’s appeal was the fact it was formerly in the collection of the Guelph Museum in Guelph, Ontario, and this same style carriage was used “for Rhett Butler and Scarlett’s baby, Eugenie Victoria ‘Bonnie Blue’ in Gone with the Wind when her parents take her out for a stroll,” according to Richmond.

Dolls of all kinds made up a major portion of this auction’s offerings with a lot that contained two bisque head dolls; one being a 27 inch Simon and Halbig and the other an 18 inch thought-to-be French (unmarked) doll. Both had composition bodies and wore white dresses. They sold together for $1,320.

Another lot of two bisque head and composition body dolls with both being Simon & Halbig examples sold together for $840. The larger 37 inch doll had blond curls and blue eyes and wore a white lace dress and matching lace cap. This doll was marked “Santa 1249.” The smaller 29 inch high doll wore a white lace dress and held a hand-knitted string handbag.

er young collectors have interest in dolls. But there were some wonderful examples that sold. Unusually large dolls, actually and in good condition which drew bidders from around the world.”

Stay tuned for round two in early 2023 and possibly a third auction in July or August of 2023 as well. “Being able to purchase items from the contents of this museum is a great opportunity to for buyers to add to or start a unique collection,” Richmond points out. The leg work has been done. Now it is just a matter of collectors following their interests to take advantage of what comes up for bids.

Right: The bidding went to $600 for this collection of smoking pipes of various materials.

Above: Bidding for this interesting set of celebrity dolls reached $250.

Below: This pram-sized Panel Boot carriage ($400) was a miniature of those favored by Queen Victoria.

Cyclorama gives 360 view of Gettysburg battle

BY DAVID MCCORMICK

The Gettysburg Cyclorama is a cyclorama painting of that battle by French artist Paul Philippoteaux. The painting depicts Pickett's Charge, that took place on October 3, 1863. The painting is a 360° cylindrical painting—a cyclorama. Included in the life-sized painting are Cemetery Ridge, the Angle, and the "High-water mark of the Confederacy". When finished the original painting was 22 feet high and 279 feet in circumference. The rendering that is displayed in Gettysburg is 42 feet high and 377 feet in circumference.

Philippoteaux in partnership with his father, turned out massive works portraying war scenes throughout the world. In 1879 an assemblage of Chicago investors tapped him to craft the Gettysburg Cyclorama. In preparation for the massive project Philippoteaux traveled to the Gettysburg Battlefield in April 1882. Over a period of weeks, he sketched and photographed the site. And over many months Philippoteaux scrutinized the numerous actions that made up the entire battle. The artist also conversed with several surviving Gettysburg combatants to get a real sense of the battle. Union generals Winfield S. Hancock, Abner Doubleday, Oliver O. Howard, and Alexander S. Webb, were among those quizzed. Philippoteaux was quite detailed in his preparation. He constructed wooden staging along present-day Hancock Avenue and drew a circle around it. The circle was 80 feet in diameter. He then divided the circle into ten sections. He then hired local photographer William H. Tipton to make three photographs of each section. The three photographs were comprised of the foreground, the land behind it, and the horizon. These pictures pasted together, shaped the core of the cyclorama.

Above: The Cyclorama artist, Paul Philippoteaux, painted himself into the battle scene as his signature. He is holding a sword and is standing with his back to the tree. NPS

Philippoteaux and his team labored for over a year and a half to finish the piece. The completed cyclorama was massive; nearly 100 yards long and weighing six tons. The completed project seemed to come to life with copious artifacts and sculptures, that included among other objects stone walls, trees, and fences. The appearance of this colorful cyclorama has been likened to that of today's IMAX theater.

In addition to the original Gettysburg Cyclorama, other versions were created. There was the Chicago version. The Chicago adaptation opened to the public in that city on October 22, 1883. The colorful renditions were so realistic that many veterans were seen to shed tears.

Boston opened its doors to its Gettysburg Cyclorama on December 22, 1884. A new specially designed building, the Cyclorama Building, was built to house the city's version. Due to the success of the original Gettysburg Cyclorama a third and fourth were created, one in Philadelphia and the other in Brooklyn, New York.

After years of suffering damage, and after two restorations the original Gettysburg Cyclorama was housed in a facility, the new Gettysburg Museum and Visitor Center on Hunt Avenue. The completely refurbished Cyclorama exhibition was reopened in September 2008.

Superman

Planet as a reporter — where he could hear the news, and react to it, first.

Non-science minds have difficulty understanding Kal-El’s superhuman abilities, but suffice it to say Superman draws his strength and super abilities, such as X-ray vision, from our yellow sun. Knowing he would stand out in society, John and Martha Kent advised young Clark to only use his abilities for the benefit of humanity, so Clark decided to become a crime fighter.

As Superman’s comic books became more popular, Siegel created other interesting characters to interact with Superman, including Lois Lane, the love of Clark’s life. And great superheroes need great and evil nemesis, so Siegel gave Superman evil criminals such as General Zod, Brainiac, and Superman’s arch-enemy Lex Luthor, a name that became synonymous with evil genius.

Today, comic books are big business, especially the resale of antique comic books from the Golden Age of comic books. On February 22, 2010, a rare Action Comics #1 from 1938 (the first comic that Superman appeared in) sold for $1 million. The auction was held at ComicConnect.com, a leading online auction house. Stephen Fishler, the founder of ComicConnect and creator of the 10-point comic book grading system, said of this sale, “It’s the Holy Grail of comic books.” Vincent Zurzolo, co-owner of ComicConnect says that the huge increase in value is not uncommon. “High-grade copies (of comic books) are rarely offered for sale,” Zurzolo explained. “When they do come on the market, you can expect to see a big leap in value.”

When new, back in 1938, Action Comics #1 sold for 10¢, which may have seemed like a fortune to a young boy during the Great Depression. But one thing is for certain, anytime a comic book can appreciate so much that it sells for a $1 million, it is time to start searching your attics and basements again. This is just one of the joys of collecting Superman comics.

Below: This DC Comic from 1966 shows Lois Lane, Superman’s girlfriend, fighting Cat Woman on the cover. This comic is valued at $27,000.

Above: Rare, 1st appearance of Lex Luthor. This Action Comic #23 from 1940 is valued at $22,000.

On August 12, 2022, an Action Comics #1 from 1938 (Superman’s debut) was offered on eBay for $3 million. To date, this comic has not sold. Novice collectors need to be careful when paying large amounts of money for Superman comic books. Some of these comics have been “restored,” so they are not in original condition.

Below: This Marvel comic from 1976 pits Superman against the Amazing Spiderman. Even though the spider is no match for Superman, this comic is valued at $25,000.

Above: Restored DC comic from 1939 that was offered on eBay for $750,000.

tors concentrate on a single publisher, such as Action Comics, which many collectors consider the grand-pappy of all Superman publishers. Other collectors search for covers that attract their attention, and still others collect every Superman comic book they can find.

Superman achieved what no other superhero has achieved—he remained the Number 1 comic book hero, based on sales, for over 40 years. It wasn’t until 1980 that another caped crusader passed Superman as best-selling superhero. But Superman will always remain the remembered leader in comic book sales because, after all, he is Superman!

Below: This Action Comic Book #4 from 1938 has the 4th appearance of Superman in it. The comic was recently offered on the Internet for $31,000.

Sandusky Street Antiques hosts - Holiday open house Nov. 12

DELAWARE, Ohio —Sandusky Street Antiques at 30 N. Sandusky Street in Delaware, Ohio, welcomes the community to a fun, festive day of shopping on Saturday, November 12 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. during its 14th annual, holiday open house which will be filled with the sounds and decorations of the season. Owners Jeanne and David Kessler have enjoyed meeting the many customers and listening to the stories of their personal collections.

The two level shop features vintage holiday items to decorate the home and unique gifts such as jewelry, linens, furniture, primitives, glassware and pottery, architectural pieces, folk art and more from the 1500s to the mid 1900s. A portion of the lower level of this historic 1869 building features newer home accessories with a vintage appeal plus antiques and collectibles.

The building was erected in 1869 and was home to a haberdashery shop, five and dime, McCrory’s, Pilsner’s and other businesses. The upper levels, which are now restored loft apartments, were once used as a ballroom and as a meeting place for the Knights Of Pythias. A few years ago, Ohio AAA Magazine designated the business one of the top antiques destinations in the Midwest.

The event will feature refreshments. For additional information, contact Sandusky Street Antiques at (740) 363-1405.

Right: Sandusky Street Antiques will host a holiday open house on Nov. 12.
