BY KARIN MILLIMAN

WOLCOTTVILLE, Ind. — Silver was definitely the word of the day at a recent auction held by Strawser Auction Company. A Tiffany and Company wave edge collection consisted of 45 pieces of flatware. The set included nine dinner knives, ten eight-inch forks, ten seven-inch forks, eight 6 5/8 inch forks, twenty-three teaspoons, eleven demitasse spoons, five servings' spoons, and two butter knives. There were nine extra knives included at a

Simpich character dolls have a Thanksgiving flair

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

American doll collectors have loved Simpich Character Dolls since their inception in 1952. Today, these dolls are still highly sought after, especially specialty Simpich dolls such as Simpich Thanksgiving Dolls.

Artists Bob and Jan Simpich founded Simpich a doll catalog and website. Character Dolls in 1952 in Colorado Springs, Colora- Dolls are made from local do. Character dolls have included historical and mythological figures, such as Tom Sawyer, Alice in Wonderland, Santa, Pecos Bill and many others trict. For much of their creative time, Jan specialized in delicate, youthful appearing dolls such as "The Standing Angel," and Bob specialized in grandfatherly-type dolls, such as Santa Claus.

At its height, Simpich Character Dolls employed 45 artisans, selling their dolls locally from their store and nationally from Character Simpich Colorado clays and from original molds, making them ceramic figurines.

Although both Bob and

Jan are artists, neither of

Bob and Jan created their first Character Dolls from found materials because they could not afford to buy gifts for their parents at Christmas. "We never set out to form a business," Bob said. But word of mouth started doll orders flooding in, and the dolls were instant hits, and in 1978 the couple opened a store in Old Colorado City Historic Dis-had them extensive ceramic training. They simply learned the ceramic business as they produced dolls. After each doll had been molded and fired, Bob and Jan hand painted each doll, made costumes for the dolls, and then dressed and mounted the dolls. Both Bob and Jan have stated that it was employee dedication that kept the business running smoothly.

In 2007, Bob and Jan their dolls are nearly 70 years old, and all of the closed their store and stopped producing dolls dolls are highly collectfor sale. Today, some of ible.

knives, a meat fork, two serving spoons, and a gravy ladle. In total there was almost 124 ounces of silver. All handles were hollow.

If your taste ran more to the decorative rather than the useful, a sterling silver sailing ship might have been more your cup of tea. This was a silver Viking boat created by David-Andersen. It measured ten inches by nine inches and showed a weight of 8.6 ounces. The inscription on this sailing ship read "Minne Til Addison Outwater FRA Norge", which simply translates that it was made in memory to Addison Outwater who was from Norway. It could be used for serving crackers on a sideboard, so was still useful even in its decorative state. It sold for $250.

A Georg Jensen sterling silver compote was 14.5 ounces of silver. It came with a spoon and sold for $800.

A pair of Tiffany and Company American Indian spoons was sold one right after the other. The first one was 3.04 ounces and boasted a buffalo. This one measured seven and one-quarter inches and sold for $950. The second one was a slotted spoon, also by Tiffany and Company. This slotted bonbon spoon featured an Indian Chief and measured 5 5/8 inches. It was numbered #665 and weighed in at 2.06 ounces. It sold for $1,100.

A Galet Willis New York sterling pitcher kept the price going up. This silver pitcher was beautiful with embossed water lilies and cattails. It was monogrammed and measured ten and one-half inches tall. It brought the hammer down at $2,000.

A rare MontBlanc Agatha Christie pen drew some attention. This fountain pen had a sterling silver snake pocket clip which had ruby eyes. It was complete with the box and original packaging. This black pen with silver highlights sold for $850.

A lady's ring drew much attention as it featured approximately 3.50 count of oval tanzanite and the gemstones were of the finest quality. The gemstone had a diamond halo which consisted of ten approximately .12 carat round brilliant-cut diamonds. There were also approximately thirty-one .15 tapered baguette-cut diamonds. The diamonds were rated F-G in color and VS in clari-The total carat tv. weight of the diamonds was approximately 5.85 carat weight. It took $5,000 to be declared the new owner of this exquisite piece of jewelrv

Moving on to some unusual pieces that were featured, a clock was put on the auction block. This grandfather clock was highly decorated with bears. This tall case clock had three large bears on the front with oak leaves and branches seeming to climb right up the sides of the clock. There were three large bears on the front and two bear cubs on the top. This clock stood ninety-eight inches tall and was twenty-nine inches wide. The final sale price on this piece was an amazing $30,000.

A very rare Pedro Friedeberg hand and foot occasional table was offered up. This very top sported five feet holding it up for legs. On the top were five hands holding the glass top. It was unsigned and measured twenty-three inches around and twenty-two inches tall. The hammer fell on this conversation-starter at $9,500.

An oil lamp sold for $17,000. This Mount Washington Napoli oil lamp was gorgeous with some enameled Palmer Cox brownies. The fact that it had a replacement font and stood only fifteen inches didn't seem to bother the bidders. The cute brownies danced around the lamp and added to the appeal.

A stag standing on a rocky oval mount base drew attention. It had applied bulrushes and other grasses and was impressed with a double fish mark. This statue mouth was mounted on a lily pad. There were bulrushes and a blossom base on this twelve inch piece. It appeared as if the kingfisher had actually stopped to rest on the lily pad. The final sale price on this piece of pottery was $7,000.

Sporting beautiful blue colors was a fan cheese keeper. This piece had great color and detail and stood ten inches high. A Wedgwood majolica cobalt servicing bowl with lid, this one could be used but would make a beautiful accent piece for a sideboard. A bird was sitting on a branch on the side of the bowl with paler blue fans spread around it. The dark blue made the fans really stand out on this exquisite piece. It brought a final bid price of $9,000. A monumental Minton majolica ewer was wonderfully detailed. Standing twenty-three inches high, this piece was modeled with a mermaid handle. The tail of the mermaid was wrapped around a horned Bacchus mask on the bottom of the handle. There were laurel leaf swags running along both sides and a putto below the spout who looked very angelic. There were panels in was attributed to Hugo Lonitz and was a large piece as it stood thirteen inches across and 10 <sup>3</sup>⁄<sub>4</sub> inches high. One antler been reattached, but that didn't seem to bother the bidders. The detail was so minute on this stag that it appeared the artist had just miniaturized a real stag and stood it on the rocks. The price kept climbing on this stag until it reached the $8,000 mark.

If you wish to impress your friends, just use a George Jones majolica tray for serving them food. A three-lobed serving tray with the handle molded as a kingfisher holding a fish in his

These weights once kept newspapers from blowing away

By David McCormick

As newspapers become more of a commercial success in the late 1800s; more and more of them began to be sold from newsstands. If there is one thing a newspaper is good at, it is flying away in even the slightest of breezes, so enterprising people began using weights to keep the papers in place.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Mortimer Spiller tapped into the market manufacturing thousands of these newsstand paper weights. Many of Spiller's weights were shipped overseas by Life, Time and the Herald Tribune to newsstands in London, Paris, and other European capitals.

The purpose of a newsstand paperweight is utilitarian; its primary purpose is to stop a stack of newspapers from being carried off by the wind. While a brick or large rock would serve the same purpose; larger newspapers such as the New York Times and Chicago Tribune realized the newsstand paperweights with their names embossed might be a great advertising tool. Smaller newspapers also got into the act. It was this realization that prodded newspaper companies to distribute these weights to newsstands. There was also another purpose of the weights: it dissuaded someone from pinching the top newspaper from the stack.

During World War II many of these weights were put into scrap Below: Village Voice cast-iron weight, $150, eBay seller: alisjohanso_0 effort. But when the war ended newsstand paperweights were back. Spiller seeing the market now wide-open set manufacturing about the weights, in a small community near Buffalo, N.Y., and selling them to print publidrives to help the war cations who then dispensed them to newsstand owners.

These vintage newsstand paperweights can command substantial prices. Spiller's weights include type raised above the surface of the weight that spelled out a newspaper or periodical's name. A two-sided antique cast Iron weight touting the Ladies Home Journal and the Saturday Evening Post is offered for sale for $495 by eBay seller: ged2perfectionstore1s. This example weighs just over one pound and measures approximately 2 ¼ by 8 ¾ inches. Another, seller offered an antique cast iron newsstand paper weight for the New York Herald Tribune. side media figure John Crosby. It measures 10.5 inches across by just under 3 inches wide and weighs 1.5 pounds and is offered for sale by eBay seller: sontag_visual for $329.95.

Mortimer Spiller's firm continued making these paperweights through the 1980s. He amassed an archive of more than 150 unique newsstand paperweights and handcarved prototypes from around the globe.
