Changes aren't slowing Ohio's Swappers Day

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

JOHNSTOWN, Ohio — It's a Labor Day tradition that's big enough to make Yelp's Top 10 list of antique venues in north-central Ohio. Outdoor News calls it "a chance to reconnect with the outdoors," recognizing the show's sportsmen's heritage. The big festival with humble roots is Johnstown, Ohio's Swappers Day and it had a banner year despite the winds of change blowing.

Swappers Day has been running since 1944 making it one of the oldest — and now largest — flea markets in Ohio. It originated at the Johnstown Community Sportsmen's Club (JCSC), coming as an offshoot of a weekend of hunting dog water trials held at the facility. Those dog races grew in popularity, and an unofficial swap meet was born as participants started bringing hunting, fishing, and related items to sell or trade. Today, tens of thousands of visitors descend on the JCSC grounds to shop or do some swapping of their own.

What began as a one-day affair now runs the entire Labor Day weekend or longer when you add in area yard sales. The formal event is still held on the JCSC grounds, running Saturday through

Full-steam ahead for torpedo bottles

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Torpedo bottles, a type of soda/mineral water bottle, are unusual in that they were not designed to stand upright. Instead, the rounded or pointed bases were designed to ensure that the bottle was laid on its side so that the wired down cork would not dry out and shrink. This kept the contents from losing carbonation or evaporating.

Commonly referred to as "Hamilton's" by English collectors (William F. Hamilton of Dublin, Ireland, was granted the first patent for them in 1809), torpedo bottles used to be referred to as "ballast bottles" since many, if not most, torpedo bottles were imported from England as "ballast" (weight) in ships returning to the United States. Torpedo bottles are also known as "bombs" or "eggs" or "egg-shaped" by other collectors.

Although round bottom soda bottles are actually different than torpedo soda bottles (torpedo bottles look more like Greek amphorae), in many discussions (including this one) the names are interchangeable.

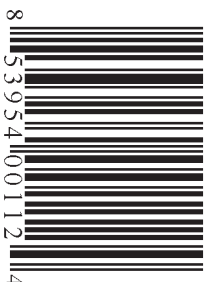

Torpedo soda bottles were made of thick heavy glass (some bottles weigh as much as a pound) to withstand the carbonation pressures of soda and

Monday. Coinciding are hundreds of town yard sales that start as early as Thursday.

The main event at the JCSC brings as many as 750 vendors who set up across five acres, offering everything from hunting and fishing gear to antiques and even small animals. These days, as many as 35,000-55,000 guests arrive, which can mean quite a packed facility.

Part of the event's draw is that it remains rooted in its field sports and rural heritage. There are events like archery and BB gun tournaments and plenty of sellers with guns and other hunting equipment for sale. Given the modern era, some find the gun sales disconcerting. However, show officials emphasize that state laws for the sale of guns and ammunition are strictly enforced. Others voice concern over pet and animal sales, although such sales are common in rural communities.

Club officials are quick to share that Swappers Day is family-friendly. In an interview in the Columbus Dispatch, Sportsman Club trustee Mark Gavin asserted, "There's No alcohol, no pornography...this is a family event." The JCSC's community mindset carries over into their using proceeds from the event to help support local nonprofits. Past beneficiaries have included local veterans' organizations, food pantries, and national outdoor groups like the National Wild Turkey Federation.

While the Sportsmen's Club is the nucleus, many head all over Johnstown for the town-wide yard and garage sales. Area residents benefit from the show's draw by setting up sales in their yards, barns, and even at the town square. The village of Johnstown encourages things by foregoing yard sale permits for Labor Day and the days before.

However, things are changing. In September 2022, Intel broke ground on a microchip factory near Johnstown that will be one of the largest manufacturing facilities in the country and is expected to bring 3,000 workers to the rural community. State officials laud the economic benefits but area residents have more mixed feelings. Many lament the looming loss of the agricultural way of life that has defined the area for nearly two centuries.

There are already waves. The once sleepy farm town is now home to two coffee shops, several restaurants, and a handful of shops, including Antiques on Main and the multi-dealer Flea Market 24/7. Real estate prices have skyrocketed, roads are being widened, and cornfields are giving way to new housing developments. Still, the occasional John Deere can be spotted tooling down the road.

For the last couple of years, Swappers Day shoppers and vendors have felt the growing pains. The main roadway, Route 62, used to be a peaceful ride, but now speeds and congestion can make it dangerous to stop for a sale. While the uptick in shoppers is positive, sellers say it can get overwhelming. One resident said, "I've been setting up on Thursdays for years. By 8 this morning, there were so many cars you couldn't get down the street!" His nearly 100 Longaberger baskets were snatched up in the fray. Another echoed much the same, "I was putting stuff out at 6 a.m. and had all kinds of people stopping."

Only time will tell what effects Intel's coming will ultimately have on the area. Meanwhile, traditions like Swappers Day will continue. Crowds and traffic withstanding, Swappers Day is still a fantastic activity for Labor Day weekend.

If you would like to attend next year, the official JCSC event is held at 7357 Sportsman Club Road in Johnstown. Admission is $6 per day, with children 10 and under free. Parking is free and handicapped parking is available.

Yard sales, of course, are free. Facebook groups for Johnstown and Swappers Day have Google Maps identifying sale locations and hours.

Bottles

mineral water. Although true torpedo bottles could not stand up, some rounded bottom soda bottles had a small flattened area in the middle of the base that allowed them to stand upright even though they wobbled.

Torpedo bottles had several manufacturing advantages over flat-bottomed bottles. 1) Forcing the bottle to lie on its side kept the liquid in constant contact with the cork and thereby prevented leakage of air. 2) The shape allowed it to be much stronger than conventional bottles of equal weight, so torpedo bottles were less likely to crack under pressure. 3) Torpedo bottles were easier to pack in crates and safer to ship. And 4) Torpedo bottles were difficult to set down once opened, so you had to drink until you finished the contents. Customers were forced to drink faster, so they purchased more drinks.

Round bottom soda bottles were usually produced in a true two-piece mold where the neck, shoulder, body, and base were produced by the two halves of the mold, so these bottles are a rounded base version of the “hinge mold” that has a single mold seam that runs continuously from one side of the body, around the base, and then up the other side. Round bottom soda bottles were the last type of two-piece mold bottles manufactured after the 1870s.

Because early torpedo bottles were hand blown, look for imperfections and bubbles in the glass. Imperfect bottles reflect age, which may make the bottle more valuable.

A torpedo bottle’s finish is also unique. The finish of a majority of the bottles is a thick heavy blob, which allowed for the wiring down of a cork closure. The blob finish was a ring of glass applied around the jagged top to give the opening added strength for when the cork was hammered home. The irregular crack often seen inside the blob top is the original jagged top (where the blowing rod was broken away). Other finishes to look for included a crown cap finish (post 1900) and a Codd’s ball stopper finish; although, the Codd’s finish is quite rare so the price of these bottles, if found, is expensive. Oil and mineral finishes can also be found, but they are quite rare in comparison to the number of torpedo bottles available for collection.

The majority of torpedo or round bottom soda bottles that were sold in the United States were imported from Great Britain. Most were embossed with company names and cities from around the British Isles. If you look for different cities, expect Belfast,

Ireland, to be a common city of manufacture.

Some collectors only collect torpedo bottles that were either made in the United States or made in Europe for U.S. bottlers. Many of these bottles were advertised in U.S. bottle makers catalogs during the early 20th century as “Round Bottom Ginger Ale” bottles. Two names to watch for are the Illinois Glass Company and Saegertown, Pa., Mineral Springs water bottles.

The Saegertown bottles are from the late 1800s.

It is difficult to know whether a bottle is of European or American manufacture. European bottle making techniques, during the 19th century, were a decade or two behind American techniques, which seems strange given that the Industrial Revolution began in Europe. But a bottle manufactured in Europe in the late 19th century or early 20th century could have been manufactured in America as early the post Civil War years up to 1880 when round bottom bottles ceased manufacture in America.

Because America imported millions of these bottles, they can be found around the United States and in garbage dumps from the era. Torpedo bottles of the same manufacture found in America are also found around the world, in British colonial countries such as Australian and even India, since British manufactured goods were exported everywhere. The greenish aqua color, prevalent in many torpedo bottles, is often seen in bottles manufactured in Britain; however, that color was not used exclusively in England, making the manufacturer’s country difficult to trace.

While the majority of round bottom/torpedo soda bottles date from the 1870s to the 1910s, there are some American made torpedo bottles that date as early as 1840. These are exceptional bottles to add to a collection, but they are rare.

Just before the end of the torpedo bottle era, crown cap bottles became prevalent (1895 and onward). With a crown cap, bottles no longer had to be laid on their sides to keep corks wet, so torpedo bottles with crown caps were often displayed upright.

M a c h i n e - m a d e examples of round bottom soda bottles were made from the early 1910s until about 1925 when torpedo bottles slipped into history.

From soap to cigarettes: Movie stars sold it all

BY DONALD-BRIAN JOHNSON

The year was 1929. Makeup maven Max Factor had just signed its first batch of Hollywood stars to endorsement contracts for his blossoming line of beauty products.

With the blessing (and active nudging) of their studios, the performers would soon appear in print ads promoting Max's cosmetics. Not so coincidentally, those ads would also promote the studios' latest movie releases.

Over the years, Max Factor's movieland roster came to encompass a significant slice of Hollywood history. There were silent screen sirens Clara Bow and Pola Negri; legendary beauties Loretta Young, Elizabeth Taylor, and Lana Turner; and drama divas Bette Davis and Joan Crawford. Lucille Ball, who signed her first Max Factor contract in 1935, even insisted on the services of the salon's "Director of Beauty" for her divorce court appearance vs. Desi Arnaz.

Of course, the stars would need to be compensated. So what sounds fair? Millions? Thousands? Hundreds?

Movie Stars

caturist Xavier Cugat for ads featuring his drawings, and a revolving door of fetching film stars. Art Linkletter pitched vegetables for Green Giant, Abbott and Costello touted Tums, and Ozzie & Harriet shooed away germs with Listerine. Puppeteer Señor Wences drank in the joys of Seagram's 7, while bandleader Lawrence Welk raised his baton in salute of the 1957 Dodge.

Some stars appeared in ads promoting their program sponsors. Bob "Pepsodent" Hope eventually moved on from toothpaste, ballyhooing everything from RCA Color TVs to Jolly Time Popcorn. Alfred Hitchcock balefully boosted Bufferin. Hearty vocalist Kate Smith sang the praises of baking with Swan's Down Cake Flour.

Above: Judy Garland, "young and lovely," thanks to Lux Soap. Stardom, July, 1943.

There were oddities, as well. The Dionne Quintuplets appeared on behalf of Karo Syrup, complete with a testimonial from their physician, Dr. Dafoe: "Karo is the only syrup served to the Quints." Silent movie queen Gloria Swanson had perhaps the most dismal movie ad career, appearing in a Doublemint Gum promotion, wearing a "Doublemint Dress" designed by famed couturiere, Valentina (yes, the dress color matched the gum wrapper). Later, Gloria endured further—although undoubtedly well-paid—humiliation, appearing in a Jergens Lotion ad under the headline "Will you look as lovely as Gloria Swanson on her 52nd birthday?" (If you used Jergens, the answer to lovely looks at the ripe old age of 52 was evidently a resounding "yes.")

With the advent of television in the late 1940s, star presence in magazine ads began to lose its luster. By the mid-1950s, most of the stars "selling it" were doing so on TV, often on their own programs, and for much more than the symbolic Max Factor dollar. Fortunately, vintage star ads are still readily available to today's collectors. They appeared in mass-market publications, and stacks of those ad-laden magazines, carefully saved by the original subscribers, can often be found at estate and garage sales. It's an affordable hobby: complete magazine prices run in the $5-15 range, topping out at $25. If you're interested only in a single star, and lack the time (or patience) to peruse piles of old magazines, buying a ready-to-go ad is a logical, if more costly, option. Enterprising dealers in paper goods buy up old magazines and dissect them, selling ads featuring specific performers at $5-10. The ads can then be individually framed, or used to create a montage. Many collectors, however, prefer to acquire complete, undamaged magazines, and keep them in their intact condition.

Paging through a magazine of the past is like opening a compact time capsule of mid-20th century popular culture—so don't rush. Let's riffle through an issue of Woman's Home Companion from 1936. On our way to the "star ads," we'll find ourselves happily waylaid by a wealth of recipes, Below: In a February, 1952 Good Housekeeping ad for Jergens, silent screen star Gloria Swanson was described as "an enchanting woman who looks years younger than she is." Gloria was 52.

group's lead crooner: skinny, smiling, and soon-to-be-famous Frank Sinatra!

In the words of Woodbury Powder, that's "a bit of stardust magic... a flawless, film-star finish."
