wise and sent them off to CGC Services for identification and grading. They were authentic, and the results were rewarding. These were just two of the great items available at a recent online auction.

The first issue of Playboy Magazine was dated December 1953 and featured Marilyn Monroe as the "Sweetheart of the Month". There was also an article about Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey. The CGC Universal service gave the issue a 7.5 grade due to the white pages being off-white, but it was otherwise in exceptional. It soared to a final bid of $4,750. Issue #2 was considered the holiday issue, dated January 1954. It featured Margie Harrison as a centerfold and an article about Bob Hope. Graded 8.0, it was claimed with a final bid of $800.

This auction was advertised as featuring a carefully curated selection of fine art, antiques, and iconic design, and it did not disappoint. A 1973 lithograph by Frank Stella titled "Les Indes Galantes V" led the art inventory. It was signed in pencil and numbered 58/100. Framed under glass, the print itself measured 16 by 22 inches. In excellent condition it drew a final bid of $3,600. Not far behind, a lithograph by Alexander Calder titled "Quilt" was from an edition of 600 published by the Founders Society of the Detroit Institute of Arts and printed by Mourlot Studio of Paris. The print measured 30 by 22 inches, signed in pencil, and was rehomed with a final bid of $3,300. A Native American painting depicting three ghost-like images walking through water that was created by JoAnne Bird was done in lovely natural colors and drew a final bid of $1,100.

A limited number of dinnerware sets were offered, but one really stood out. The Herend "Rothschild Bird" pattern was named for the Rothschild family. Allegedly, Baroness Rothschild lost a valuable necklace which was later found in the garden near a tree with songbirds. There are different pairs of birds on each item, but each is pictured in a tree with a gold necklace. The family fell in love with Eastern art were well received. A bronze throned Buddha was offered with four other figures representing the king, the queen and two guards. The set was purchased in Thailand and the tallest piece stood 20 inches. This possible alter decoration drew a final bid of $1,200. Dating back to the Qing Dynasty, 19th century, a pair of two lidded bowls with wood bases were described as Chinese Famille Rose porcelain with polychrome enameled decoration. Measuring 7 inches tall without their bases they also secured a $1,200 high bid. There were many enchanting pieces of Chinese art, including a delicate hand-carved jade blossom sculpture on a carved wood base that depicted blue blossoms on an intricate white leaf structure. It measured 4 inches tall by 6 inches long and was claimed with a final bid of $130.

Collectors on the lookout for Ohio's FraMae pottery

Above: Large, 19-inches tall, FraMae "Ravens on Cornstalk" art pottery vase that was produced in 1982. Collectors of this pottery can find a wide range of decorative pieces most of which are still very affordable

Wiltjer.

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

Frank and Anna Mae Steel founded FraMae Art Pottery in 1979 in Sheffield Lake, Ohio. The pottery's name is a combination of "Frank" and "Mae," and it took them a couple of years of trial and error to begin producing pottery they were proud of.

In fact, at one time, they realized that only about 20 percent of their pottery was actually making it through firing in the kiln, and what they had did not meet their standards. Thev destroyed all of the pottery they had made up to that time and started over.

Finally, in 1981, they developed a color and glaze that met their approval and produced pottery that truly represented the pottery they had been imagining. This new line of pottery was a deep, rich brown glaze that became their signature color and glaze.

In April 1981, Frank and Anna Mae drove to California with 50 pieces of FraMae pottery to attend a meeting of the American Art Pottery Collector's Club. All 50 pieces of their work sold at this meeting, and many backlogged orders were taken.

FraMae's earliest pieces are marked "FraMae Hand Made" or "FraMae Hand Painted" along with the year of production. In 1982, the company's marketing codes were changed and pieces began being marked such as "FraMae W682," which indicates a piece of FraMae's Wildlife Line

FraMae "Lighthouse" vase handmade by Frank Steel. This beautiful "marine" vase is valued at $65

(the "W") that was produced in June 1982.

Each piece from 1982 on was marked with an alphabet letter based on FraMae's design category, such as W = WildlifeLine, A = Aviary, F =Frontier, etc. Today, FraMae Art

Pottery has an active following, and it is a highly collected small art pottery. Fortunately, FraMae Art Pottery remains affordable on the secondary markets, making the collection of these pieces both fun and assessable.

BY DONALD-BRIAN JOHNSON

Some dolls cry. Some say "Mama." Lots of them open and close their eyes. And diapered baby dolls often put those tiny diapers to practical use.

Fabric dolls, with their flexible wire underpinnings, just bend. For buyers in the 1940s and '50s, that was enough. The same holds true for today's collectors. These dolls don't really need to "do" anything. Just pose them and, when the mood strikes, change the poses. The dolls won't mind.

Fabric dolls have been around for ages, whether dolling up Egyptian tombs, or being dragged around in the dust by those Little House On The Prairie girls. Early cloth dolls have a folk art look, as many were handmade.

Although cloth-covered dolls with concealed wire allowing armatures pose-ability had been available from the 1930s onward, their widespread popularity came as Spanish souvenir dolls. In the early 1950s, companies including Larrea, Nistis, Roldan, and, most notably, Klumpe, released imaginatively designed bendable fabric dolls that tourists gleefully snapped up and brought home. The dolls, most less than a foot tall, initially offered humorous interpretations of standard Spanish clichés (bullfighters, flamenco dancers, and cigarette girls). Soon, however, the roster included hundreds of varied characters, from dentists and ballerinas to the occasional bagpipers and snake charmers.

To satisfy growing interest from consumers not fortunate enough to travel to Spain, U.S. importers, including Effanbee and John J. Schneider brought bendable fabric dolls stateside. According to a 1956 Schneider sales catalog. the possible uses for Klumpe dolls were so varied that the dolls any recipient."

"As the American pubbecomes better lic acquainted with these charming Klumpe Character Dolls, the artistic uses ever increase. Aside from becoming more and more the ideal collection for the young and old, starting with one or two, then adding new models (for birthday, Christmas, anniversary, and any sort of an excuse to add another-such as bridge prizes), we suggest to you these other uses that have created such a furor with our customers:

"Gift Shops suggest that this item is 'different,' and would be fully appreciated by the recipient, showing the fine handmade workmanship and detail. For the sport-loving, outdoor type, the 'Boy and Girl Skiers.' For the romantic type, the 'Bride and Groom.' For the those who like them a little naughty: the 'Moulin Rouge Can-Can Dancer,' or the 'Drunkard In Full Dress.' For the world traveler, the 'Gypsy Queen Dancing.' For the religious, the 'Choir Boy Kneeling on a Cushion.'

"By looking over the Klumpe list, one can find best-selling Four Sisters a doll for each occasion designs were created by suiting the personality of Aileen Bullard Franklin.

Spain wasn't the only country filling the doll carriages. Portugal produced the "Maria Helena" dolls, noted for their oversize feet, which helped them maintain freestanding balance. On the high end were Italy's more realistic Lenci dolls, produced in Turin from 1919 until 1944. Exquisitely hand-stitched by Elena "Lenci" König, Lenci dolls are noted for their "sideways glance." That downcast gaze gives the dolls a forlorn look, and author Dare Wright featured her own childhood Lenci doll, "Edith," in the best-selling photo book, The Lonely Doll.

In the United States, designers quickly joined the fabric doll parade. Some companies operated on a limited scale, making their dolls the most sought-after today. Among those with an interesting backstory: the "Four Sisters" dolls, created in Independence, Mo. These handmade dolls were indeed the work of four sisters the Bullards. Although each sister achieved artistic acclaim, the Her "Little Troll" elves, and "Charles Dickens Character Dolls" first emerged in the 1950s, and proved holiday perennials.

Also climbing aboard the holiday express were the Byers' Choice "Carolers." Their mouths always open in song, the limber, elongated Byers dolls are particularly well-suited to wintry action poses. The first Byers' Choice dolls were created by Joyce Byers in 1960s, the their hand-crafted stylings intended to capture the spirit of traditional Christmases. The Byers' Pennsylvania enterprise began in a garage workshop staffed only by family. Today, more than 80 employees create thousands of Byers' Choice Carolers each year.

The most ubiquitous mobile dolls, however, are those created by Annalee. Named for their Barbara designer, Annalee (Davis) Thorndike, the rationale behind their creation is clearly stated on each doll's hangtag:

"We hope you'll enjoy your doll's whimsical

Below: "Bagpipe Duo," attributed to Klumpe

charm for many years. Its mobility and flexibility allow you to create your own ideas in positioning, resulting in the best of display and decoration."

Annalee Davis began creating fabric dolls as an outgrowth of her interest in puppetry. Although her initial handmade dolls were sold through local craft guilds, Annalee's design dreams were put on a back burner following her marriage to Charles "Chip" Thorndike. From their Meredith, N.H. home, the two operated "Thorndike's Eggs and Auto Parts." In 1950, with the poultry farm failing, Annalee turned again to dollmaking. Her first design studio: the converted chicken coop.

Like most bendable dolls, those by Annalee have molded felt bodies, with painted faces.

Expanding in 1964 to a 34,000-foot "Factory in the Woods," Annalee quickly cornered the market on holiday celebrations. The seemingly limitless lineup of seasonal dolls, ranges from a string of Santas, elves, and reindeer, to broom-riding Halloween witches and egg-hiding Easter bunnies. A company highlight came in 1975, when Annalee dolls decorated the White House Christmas tree.

Unlike many mid-century dolls, flexible fabric dolls remain in remarkably good condition, despite the passage of years. The reason is simple: these were dolls to look at, not dolls to play with. Other than dust, and occasional felt fleabites, fabric dolls of the past continue to present a pleasing picture.

Also pleasing are the prices. Dependent on the intricacy of their costuming and accessories, Klumpe and Klumpe-like dolls are generally less than $75; Byers' Choice, less than $100. Four Sisters dolls top out at $200. Priciest by far are Lenci dolls: rare editions can reach $1,000 or more. The best deals are dolls by Annalee, with many vintage pieces from the 1970s still available at less than $25. And they are plentiful: a typical day's Annalee inventory on eBay offers nearly 10,000 choices.

Identifying the maker of a fabric doll is often catch-as-catch-can, as many imported dolls had only long-since-vanished hang tags and labels. Unmarked dolls of similar style are often lumped under the "Klumpe" banner, although Klumpe dolls are generally distinguished by their "V"-shaped eyebrows. Lenci made things easier, with the company's marking indicated on the doll's foot. Easiest of all to recognize: Annalee. Since 1986, each Annalee doll has been outfitted with an attached and dated cloth tag.

Bendable fabric dolls are particularly winsome examples of mid-20th-century consumer-oriented design, capturing the irresistible innocence of an earlier time. As Annalee Thorndike herself once put it, "it's the 'positive-ness' of the face. It's the smile. If you smile, someone's got to smile back."
