ACROSS THE AUCTION BLOCK

Case farm sign reaped a $30,000 bid at Chupp

BY KARIN
MILLIMAN

SHIPSHEWANA, Ind. — Signs brought big money at a recent Chupp's three-day auction. The comfortable facility in Shipshewana offers a great auction venue.

A Case sign with an eagle perched on a simple black and white image of the Earth was one of the auction highlights. It was in great shape, with just a few minor scratches and measured 6 by 3 feet. It was made of metal and sandstone and still retained some great color.

Left: A paper advertisement piece, this Purina Dog Chow poster had excellent graphics. It sold for $8,250.

Above: Selling for $30,000, this Case sign was the top-selling piece at this three-day auction.

"Case Quality Machines for Profitable Farming" was printed across the central part of the sign, and it stood out against the greenish-yellow background. It had a wooden frame around it to protect the edges and was a fantastic find. It brought a bid price of $30,000.

A Case neon sign featured a porcelain face. It had a fair amount of edge wear. It was in working condition, but smelled hot if left plugged in. It measured 72 by 38 inches and depicted the eagle sitting

Waiting for that 'pop' when Jack springs out of the box

LEMASTERS

For collectors, "Pop Goes the Weasel" is much more than a nursery rhyme; it is the lively tune that plays when a Jack-in-the-Box handle is turned. The traditional song goes back some 150 years; however, the meaning of the words may go back several centuries beyond that.

All around the Mulberry Bush,
The monkey chased the weasel.
The monkey stopped to pull up his sock,
Pop! Goes the weasel.

Half a pound of tuppenny rice,
Half a pound of treacle.
Mix it up and make it nice,
Pop goes the weasel.

Some linguists believe that "weasel" actually refers to King James I and that "rice" and "treacle" are slang terms for potassium nitrate and charcoal. If this is true, then the song probably refers to the Gunpowder Plot of 1605 when Sir Robert Catesby attempted to assassinate James I and blow up the House of Lords.

Other interpretations of the lyrics suggest the words

"Pop Goes the Weasel" may mean a tailor's flat iron, a hatter's tool, a clock reel (used for spinning), a weaver's shuttle (which makes a popping sound when the loom is in use), a piece of silver plate, and that the term is Cockney rhyming slang for "coat," so it means to "pop" or pawn your coat to raise money to buy ale at the Eagle pub. The Eagle freehold pub existed then as a London music hall and now (since 1901) as a public drinking house, so the song may refer to selling one's coat to buy ale at the pub.

In the mid-1800s, the atop a slightly colored world. This Case advertising piece was sold for $11,000.

A double-sided wooden and sandstone sign read “A.J. Carll & Co. Livery Boarding and Sale Stable”. It measured a large 48 by 20 inches and came complete with the hanging brackets. It was in excellent condition with some expected wear from age. The background was a simple black, which made the yellow lettering stand out. It brought a final bid price of $25,000.

It is unusual to find an old wood and sandstone sign with the original label still attached to the back. However, one did show up at this auction. It was a Janesville Implements sign with a wooden frame. It measured 71 inches long by 11 inches wide and was in excellent condition, with some wear to the frame. There were no fancy images on this one, but that didn’t affect the selling price. It was loaded up for an impressive $13,500.

If you have a farm dog, you should feed it Purina Dog Chow, according to a paper sign that sold for $8,250. This one had excellent graphics. It measured 20 by 26 inches and showed a l dog herding the cattle up a dirt lane toward the barn. With a silo on either side of the barn and the farmhouse in view, this advertisement had all the farm angles. It said “For the Farm Dog, It’s a Square Meal”, and showed a small picture of the product.

A sign advertising marine finishes brought a bid of $7,000. It measured 56 by 32 inches and was a single-sided tin sign. It was self-framed and embossed, still showing excellent color and graphics. It was put out for Interlux Marine Finishes, and was in good shape. It showed some minor scuffs on the boat image and had some wear to the frame edges, but still looked beautiful. It showed two boats with workers applying the final Interlux finish to each ship. With primarily blue skies showing a few wispy clouds, this advertising piece conjured up visions of days spent on the lake.

Salesman samples at these Chupp Auctions consistently impress. And this time was no exception. A very early salesman sample horse-drawn reaper took top honors in this category, selling for a final price of $25,000. It measured 18 by 21 inches, not including the tongue, and was in excellent condition. It showed just a few minor repairs and was made of wood and brass.

Second in this category was a horse-drawn corn stalk cutter. This salesman’s sample was nickel-plated and made of walnut, measuring 20 inches long with the tongue. The tongue had been replaced at some point, but it didn’t matter as the bids kept rolling in. It took an impressive $17,750 to tuck this tiny cutter away and take it home. And coming in with an impressive sale price at $16,000 was a brass and wood horse-drawn cultivator with excellent paint. It measured 9 by 14 inches and was in fantastic condition. It was an Iron Age No. 60 Pivot Wheel Riding cultivator.

A salesman’s sample Flint & Walling windmill, made of wood and brass, was keeping the prices high. A Star Mill windmill from Kendalville, Ind., stood roughly 16 inches tall, and the wheel measured about 11 inches in diameter. A few of the wheel paddle tips were broken, but that didn’t bother the bidders much. It wasn’t passed to the new owner until the bidding reached an impressive $15,500.

A full-size fishmonger wagon was sold. This interesting piece of history was a horse-drawn wagon that marketed products for L.D. Barrett Fish & Oysters, according to the wording on the side. It had great fish details still visible and came with two carriage lamps. It had a brass maker’s tag for Ed Gerlly & Co. of Lancaster, Pa. It measured 70 inches hub to hub and was 101 inches in length. It was in great condition and would make an excellent display piece in any front yard. It took a final bid of $8,500 to secure this one.

Chupp Auctions always seems to offer corn nubbies for sale. Even though their size is generally small their historical use means they command reasonable prices. The one that took top honors in this auction was a hand-crank version, which sold for $9,000 before it was sold.

Two guns were passed

Carlton Ware alligator line takes a bite out of collecting

BY LARRY LEMASTERS

James Frederick Wiltshaw, James Alcock Robinson, and William Herbert Robinson founded Carlton Ware pottery in 1890. Originally, the company was named Wiltshaw and Robinson. In 1894, the trademark and trade name “Carlton Ware” was introduced, and Wiltshaw and Robinson’s ceramic factory was renamed Carlton Works.

The partnership between Wiltshaw and the Robinsons dissolved in 1911, forcing Wiltshaw to form a new limited company called Wiltshaw and Robinson Limited. In 1918, James Wiltshaw died from an accident at Stoke-on-Trent railway station. Control of the company passed to his son Frederick Cuthbert Wiltshaw, who continued to expand the company, purchasing Birks, Rawlins and Company in 1930.

Carlton Ware was an English pottery based in Stoke-on-Trent. The company is known for its line of ceramic tableware, often in the form of highly decorated leaves or fruit, and for its line of ceramic toucans, produced as promotional items for Guinness. Carlton Ware produced hand-painted domestic pottery in Art Deco styles during the 1920s and 1930s. Today, these Art Deco pieces are highly sought after by collectors.

Carlton Ware’s bread and butter ceramic pieces were its decorative giftware and domestic pottery. The pottery’s earliest pieces included decal and hand-painted tableware in a range of mostly floral patterns that was typical ceramic ware for the times. Many of Carlton Ware’s pieces were inspired by Wedgwood and other respected English potters.

Above: This Carlton Ware lidded “Florida Gators” teapot was “passed” at the British Ceramics and Pottery Auction in 2023. Estimated value had been $200 - $800.

During the early 1900s Carlton Ware produced a line of “crested ware” for the tourist market.

Carlton Ware was ahead of its time with ceramic ware innovations during the 1920s, becoming the first pottery company to introduce new methods of production where decal and hand-painting work was applied to high-glaze substrates. Art work discovered in King Tutankhamen’s tomb in 1922 inspired much of Carlton Ware’s Egyptian ware of this period.

Carlton Ware also experimented with other popular ceramic designs, such as stylized dragons, birds, and a series of Oriental-inspired patterns of which New Mikado and Chinoiserie were the most popular.

The company also sold mottled, mostly pale blue lusterware under the separate “Armand” brand. Carlton Ware also produced some of the earliest known “Oven to Table” ceramic ware in 1929, again, making them innovators in the pottery world.

Arthur Wood & Son purchased Carlton Ware in 1966, and the pottery was sold again in 1987 to County Potteries PLC. All assets of the company went into voluntary liquidation in 1991 and were acquired in 1997. Carlton Ware is still produced today in Stoke in Trent.

During the years 1968 – 1987, animals featured prominently in Carlton Ware designs. Ceramic artists Roger Michell and Danka Napiorkowska illustrated most of these designs. Some of the last animal designs produced before the pottery closed in 1989 were teapots in the form of hippos, elephants, cats, and alligators.

The alligator-styled pottery ware is both whimsical and practical, making this line of ware highly collectible both in England and America.

The value of Carlton Ware pieces depends on condition, scarcity, and desirability in an ever-shrinking collectors’ market. Often, the more highly decorated a Carlton Ware piece, the more desirable it is. The prices of Carlton Ware alligator teapots reflect not only the teapots collectability but also the whimsical tastes in late-mid-century pottery.

For further reading and research on this English pottery, Carlton Ware — The Complete Guide: Including a Price Guide by Czes and Yvonne Kosniowski is considered a “must” read for all Carlton Ware collectors.

tune “Pop Goes the Weasel” was used for a lively children’s game and a popular dance. The game was played like musical chairs since children would dance around chairs until the music stopped (at “Pop Goes the Weasel”) and then rush to occupy a chair. The player who failed to sit in a chair was eliminated, and a chair was removed, reducing the number of chairs by one until there was only one weasel left.

Like most nursery rhymes, “Pop Goes the Weasel” has odd imagery, especially for children, but most of the early English nursery rhymes derived from actual, historical events, making it both fun and frustrating trying to decipher the rhymes meaning.

Collectors primarily know the tune Pop goes the Weasel because it is the tune used in a Jack-in-the-Box, a children’s toy that is one of the oldest known children’s toys that is still manufactured today. A Jack-in-the-Box is a spring-loaded toy that plays music, has a crank, and has a puppet inside the box. When the crank is turned, music is produced, traditionally “Pop Goes the Weasel.” Toward the end of the song, where the lyric “POP” would go, a latch is released and a spring-loaded puppet is propelled out of the box. Traditionally, the puppet is a clown or jester; although, the original, historic puppet was a devil.

Most toy historians believe that the idea for a Jack-in-the-Box toy dates to 13th century England when Sir John Schorne, according to English folklore, cast the devil into one of his boots in order to protect the town of North Marston in Buckinghamshire from demonic possession. Drawings of Sir John often depict him holding a boot with a devil head popping out of it, so devils became popular puppets in Jack-in-the-Boxes.

The Nuremburg Toy Museum documents the earliest known Jack-in-the-Box was made by a German clock maker in the early 1500s as a gift for the son of a prince. This Jack-in-the-Box was a plain wooden box with a crank that played a simple tune. The “Jack” was a comical-looking devil with a “leering smile.” Soon after this box was made, other rich noblemen requested Jack-in-the-Boxes for their children. And Jack-in-the-Boxes have never been out of production since.

The 1930s produced many highly sought after Jack-in-the-Boxes. These boxes were made of tin and were lithographed with images from nursery rhymes, Disney, or other popular cartoon characters.

Today, Fisher Price, Ideal, Mattel, and Hasbro are just a few of the companies still making Jack-in-the-Boxes. Collectors have recently begun seeking vintage Fisher Price Jack-in-the-Boxes, some of which are now 50 years old.

Jack-in-the-Boxes have remained popular children’s toys for nearly 600 years. The Encyclopedia of American Folk Art credits “the element of surprise” for Jack-in-the-Boxes continued appeal. Children of all ages love to turn the crank, listen to “Pop Goes the Weasel” and anticipate the flutter of excitement when Jack or the Devil jumps out of his box, which is why, in any antique store, you will find adult children still playing with Jack-in-the-Boxes.
