ACROSS THE AUCTION BLOCK

Copper coffeepot brews $170 bid

BY KARIN
MILLIMAN

COLDWATER, Mich. — Auctioneer Steve Burns was excited to be able to offer up the estate of Sheryl Mowery, including the beautiful house. Even though the weather was rather chilly, the crowd kept filtering in and hung around the sale. This was a very nice ranch home that boasted three bedrooms, one bath on the main level, and a half bath in the basement. It came complete with a three-season room that overlooked a was held before the auction, and the seller had the final say on whether the house was sold.

The bidding began with the opening bid of $150,000 and rose slowly. The seller watched as a couple of bidders worked against each other, hoping to emerge as the new owners of this ranch home. "The house will sell when we are done," Burns said after the figure reached a level the seller had

Art Deco furniture still wows fans

BY LARRY
LEMASTERS

Many art scholars believe that the streamlined elegance of the Art Deco style directly led to the 20th century's "modern" moment. To help support this belief, the term "Art Deco" came into existence in 1966, when a Paris exhibition presented a retrospective of the 1925 Paris Exposition. The 1966 exhibition was called Exposition Internationale des Arts Decoratifs. "Arts decoratifs" (in French) means "decorative arts." The term was shortened to Art Deco, and the name stuck for the entire body of work encompassing this great, visually beautiful, movement.

The Art Deco Movement reached fruition between the two world wars, roughly 1920-1939; however, some scholars date the Art Deco period from 1900 until the mid-1950s. Common themes that distinguish this style from earlier styles are a "modernization" of many artistic styles and themes from the past. Looking at Art Deco items, from architecture and furniture to the applied arts, it is easy to detect the influence of Far and Middle Eastern design. Other influences noted in Art Deco are Greek, Roman, Egyptian, and Mayan themes. Modern elements that influenced this movement include the echoing of machine and automobile patterns and machinery shapes such as stylized gears and wheels that symbolize industrialization. The modern art movements of Cubism, Futurism, and Constructivism also influenced Art Deco. Natural elements such as sunbursts and flowers also are found throughout Art Deco items. With all of these different themes, it is sometimes confusing

Art Deco

to distinguish which items are Art Deco and which are not. Many scholars simply encompass nearly everything manufactured during the period between the World Wars as Art Deco, so the term has taken on a somewhat all-encompassing definition when that is probably not accurate.

One common theme that surfaces in most Art Deco pieces is an unbridled enthusiasm for what man and technology could accomplish. Art Deco could be considered another renaissance period since most people born into the early Art Deco period faced a world without electricity, radio, or phones. But by 1939, the world was populated by transatlantic flights, intercontinental phone-calls, electric appliances, automobiles, televisions, and the entire world stood on the brink of the atomic age. All of these modern advances were brought to light during the Art Deco period.

Areas that fully showcase all of the Art Deco elements and themes are interiors and furnishings. It is in these two areas, especially furniture, that many of the Art Deco new materials, such as glass block, neon, chrome, terrazzo, peach or cobalt mirrors, and opaque colored glass panels, became common building elements.

cutting edge of modern taste celebrated in the 1925 Paris Exposition drew French and immigrant furniture designers. Soon French furniture designs achieved international recognition, especially among wealthy Americans, traveling to Paris in search of the latest fashions.

Few English furniture designers attempted the innovative and indigenous styles of Art Deco. Instead, English tastes remained stolid and true, favoring conservative, formal French taste and design over the more modern Art Deco. However, some English furniture designers, notably the Epstein Brothers, represented the Art Deco movement in their use of fine walnut veneers in furniture.

Following the Paris Exhibition, many American furniture designers, including Heywood-Wakefield, quickly moved into interpretive French designs, using mahogany, palisander, macassar ebony, and ivory in their furniture designs. Jacques - E m i l e Ruhlmann achieved great prestige and popularity in America when his furniture was promoted by the B. Altman department stores. Other furniture companies quickly reproduced Ruhlmann's designs.

If Art Deco furniture ever achieved the label "as American as apple pie," it was in the work of Paul Frankl. Frankl's work embodied American Modernism with most of his pieces designed for New York apartments. Many consider Frankl's pieces inseparable from the culture of New York itself, which is the city that symbolized the American move into the modern world.

Frankl was also an architect, who arrived in the United States in 1914 and quickly fell in love with New York City. In 1922, Frankl opened Frankl Galleries in Midtown Manhattan, where in 1926, he introduced his signature line of Skyscraper furniture. Skyscraper buildings represented the towering ideals of optimism and progress for America, and Frankl wanted to offer these same ideals in his furniture. Originally, Skyscraper furniture was inexpensively manufactured, using California redwood and nickel-plated steel, with crudely lacquered panels in red and black. However, Frankl's Skyscraper furniture is still one of the most sought after designs of all American Art Deco furniture, making it center pieces in many Art Deco collections.

Most American Art Deco furniture is unsigned, so it is still affordable as collector pieces today. Two interesting and innovative American's styles to look for are the glitzy Hollywood style that used mirrored surfaces and blue glass and a sleek, streamlined style that was popular from the early 1930s through 1945. The streamlined style can be found in dining tables and chairs from American roadside diners of this era.

One American label to watch for is the Modernage Furniture that began in New York in the 1920s. The company, now in Miami, still manufactures furniture today.

And, finally, for those of you who collect furniture for investment, Art Deco room screens are some of the most valuable American Art Deco pieces around. These screens were highly popular from the late 1920s.

approved. “We love cash, but will take a good check or a credit card”, he added. It took a final bid price of $210,000 to be able to close on this gorgeous piece of property, with the winning young lady all smiles as she went inside to settle the paperwork.

Moving on to the general household items being sold an Ithaca calendar clock made in New York sold for $65. The bottom larger display showed the day and month, while the top showed the time. It was all contained in a beautifully carved wooden frame.

A gorgeous brown wicker set of furniture sat in the backyard, looking very comfortable, whether for sitting around visiting or sharing a meal. It consisted of the table and six chairs with some very soft-looking cushions. The bidding continued to rise while people enjoyed sitting in the chairs until a new owner took over with a winning bid of $140.

A copper coffeepot drew the interest of bidders. It rose to $170 before a new owner quickly picked it up and carried it out the door of the basement.

A vintage piece still sported the hankie drawers on either side of the top of this dresser. The original mirror adorned the top with some gorgeous carving around it. Three drawers with the original drawer pulls finished off the bottom. It appeared to be majestic as it stood waiting to see who the new owner would be. It took a high bid of $90 to load this beautiful piece of history.

A hutch with glass doors on the top took its place on the auction block. This piece was a bit more modern. It had two small drawers under the top doors and two solid doors on the bottom. It would make an excellent piece for a dining or living room. It brought a high bid price of $125.

Above: This wicker set was in great shape and could be used inside or out, with a final bid price of $140.

Above: With the two small hankie drawers on top, this dresser was in great shape and sold for $90.

Above: In perfect condition, this hutch could be used anywhere in the house. It took a final bid of $125 to load it up.

From pennies to auction stars, Lincoln has been in the news

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

Even though he has been dead for 160 years, Abraham Lincoln continued to make headlines in the past few weeks. And all of this without the benefit of a press agent or advance team.

First, there was an auction, or rather, “The Auction,” conducted on May 21 at the Chicago auction house of Freeman’s | Hindman. Some 144 lots of Lincoln memorabilia were offered, a number of which were extremely personal and related to his assassination on Friday, April 14, 1865. With realized sales of 136 lots, approximately 94 percent of those up for bid, net sales nearly doubled the pre-auction estimate of $4 million, topping out just shy of $8 million.

Top sellers included a pair of blood-stained leather gloves that Lincoln wore to Ford’s Theatre on the night of his assassination ($1,512,500), as well as a handkerchief that he carried on that same night ($826,000). A poster offering a $100,000 reward for the apprehension of the murderer (“still at large”) made $762,500, rounding out the top three performing lots, sold to one bidder who remains anonymous. In response, the room erupted into applause when the gavel came down, according to Joshua McCracken, a books and manuscripts specialist for the auction house. Among other assassination-related items sold at the brisk sale were a ticket stub for an orchestra seat for the performance of “Our American Cousin” ($381,500) and a cuff button worn by Lincoln that night ($445,000).

Above: While others were bidding sums in the six and seven figures for Lincoln artifacts, many Americans are wondering what will happen to their penny collection.

Speaking after the sale, McCracken reported that online bidders outnumbered those in the gallery, which was full throughout the auction, with standing room only during the top sales. He characterized the bidding as “vigorous.” Items sold represented 10 percent of the collection of the Lincoln Presidential Foundation, a non-profit

Above: Topping the list of pricey Lincoln memorabilia recently sold at auction were these blood-stained gloves, worn on the night the 16th president of the United States was assassinated. These personal accessories changed hands for $1,512,500. (Image courtesy of Freeman’s | Hindman) organization in Springfield, Ill. Whereas McCracken said it is not “uncommon” in auctions of historic artifacts for buyers to donate them to public museums and foundations, it remains to be seen whether these items will be made available for public viewing and research. “We will have to wait and see.”

Meanwhile, as millions of dollars were being spent to own a bit of Lincoln history, the rest of us were coping with the notion that the penny, the one-cent coin bearing Lincoln’s profile and a part of the everyday lives of Americans, might soon be a thing of the past. Talk about a contrast.

A recent statement from the Treasury Department indicated that the U.S. Mint is using up its “blanks” to mint the final pennies, with early next year marking the end of their circulation. Bear in mind that this could all be subject to change, as nothing these days seems to be set in stone (much less in copper). But even so, if all goes according to plan, there will still be an estimated 114 billion pennies in circulation.

The United States is not the first country to give the humble penny the heave-ho. Canada stopped distributing pennies in 2013. My sole Canadian friend (let’s call him “George” because that’s his name) assured me that the rounding up or rounding down system for cash transactions works just fine. In fact, he said, after a few months, “the change was welcomed, saving time and bulk in the pocket.” On the other hand, George noted that he keeps some US pennies to put in his birdbath, “as I am told that the trace of copper kills mosquito larvae but doesn’t harm the birds.”

Finally, I checked in with Mike Ivankovich, who knows a thing or two about buying and selling coins. Although he agreed that it’s fun to encourage young collectors to look for wheat pennies, he noted that in the end, pennies really are not worth much. “They’re a pain in the neck” were his exact words.

But what’s to become of the people who make penny rolls, I asked. How about the penny machines, the ones that squash a penny to make a quick souvenir? Penny loafers? Penny candy? Will there no longer be a “bad penny”? How about “In for a penny, in for a pound” and “Penny wise and pound foolish?” Change is difficult. Mike’s response? He offered me a wheat penny for my thoughts.

Hull Pottery Association to host annual show and sale

CROOKSVILLE, Ohio — The Hull Pottery Association (HPA) will host the 32nd Annual Hull Pottery Show and Sale at Crooksville High School on Friday, July 11 and Saturday, July 12. The mission of HPA is to preserve, promote and educate the public about Hull Pottery. The show is free and open to the public.

Hundreds are expected to attend the two-day show, which will feature more than 30 dealers from around the country with almost 100 tables of Hull Pottery sale. Other American made pottery will also be for sale. There will be hourly raffles each day, an auction of special pieces on Friday and special guests. The photo below is from the 2024 HPA National Show. For more information visit HPA on Facebook or at www.hullpotteryassociation.org.

Hull Pottery began production in 1905 in Crooksville, Ohio, under the leadership of Addis Emmet (A.E.) Hull. The company’s early lines consisted of common utilitarian stoneware, semi-porcelain dinnerware and decorative tile. Hull continued production in Crooksville for the next several decades. During that time, the company introduced dozens of different lines including artistic/decorative lines, cookie jars, dinnerware, planters and novelty pieces. Hull even survived a flood/fire in the 1950s. In the late 1960s through the mid-1980s, the company changed its production from artistic lines to predominately House ‘n’ Garden serving ware and Imperial florist ware. Hull Pottery closed in 1986.

Each year the Hull Pottery Association commissions a special Hull commemorative that is unveiled at the show and sale.

Discover the hidden treasure of Tonalá pottery

BY WILLIAM FLOOD

Every so often, collectors stumble across something before it gets popular. Tonalá pottery is that kind of find. With its rich history and impressive craftsmanship, this Mexican folk art has quietly built a devoted following while remaining surprisingly affordable. For collectors who know where to look, Tonalá offers a golden opportunity to bring home beautiful, hand-crafted pieces packed with culture and character — before they become the next big craze.

While ceramics enthusiasts have flocked for decades to other popular Mexican folk pottery like Mata Ortiz, Mexican-made Majolica, and Talavera, Tonalá pieces — often just as artful and skillfully made — can still be found at relatively low prices. This is largely because Tonalá pottery is still crafted and sold locally, with limited exposure to export markets. Most pieces found abroad were brought home by tourists visiting Mexico.

This pottery style comes from Tonalá, a small town in Jalisco, Mexico, known for some of the richest clay in the area. The region was once inhabited by the Tonalteca people, and archaeolo-gists have traced their pottery-making tradition back more than 3,000 years. The Tonalteca developed sophisticated hand-painting and burnishing techniques that produced a smooth, glossy finish without the use of glaze - so fine, it's often likened to porcelain.

After the Spanish conquest in the 16th century, local potters began blending ancient methods with European techniques, including using lacquer glazing and wheel-throwing. Still, the burnished clay became the hallmark of Tonalá ceramics (or "Tonalá ware") and pieces eventually made their way into wealthy houses in Spain where they were considered luxury objects sourced from the Americas.

The cultural blending eventually produced three distinct categories of pottery. The most traditional, Barro Bruñido, continued the use of burnishing instead of glaze, resulting in a soft sheen and detailed, hand-painted surfaces. The second, Barro Canelo is also unglazed and relies on a cinnamon-hued clay. The third, Barro Betus, is a brightly painted style that is coated in a pine resin ("betus") before being fired.

Tonalá pottery stands out not only for the techniques involved but also for the creativity of the artisans. The area's potters produce a wide range of items, from functional vases to detailed figurines. Whimsical animal figures are the most popular, including owls and other birds, armadillos, cats, and mythical creatures called nahuales - half-human, half-animal beings drawn from local mythology. Human figures, including those representing domestic life, musicians, and religious icons are another type, which often extends to sets and dioramas that portray complete scenes. There are also Tonalá miniatures, though smaller still showcase the area's craftsmanship. Whatever the variety, pieces are often adorned with a "flor de Tonalá" (Tonalá flower) that features an oval center with rounded petals that form a scalloped pattern.

Certain pieces are prized for their association with notable makers. Many of these artists belong to families with deep-rooted pottery traditions, where techniques and aesthetics are passed down over generations. A handful of museums have showcased their work, and collectors often pursue pieces that bear their signatures or display a recognizable, individual style.

Among the most sought-after is Candelario Medrano (1918–1986). Starting as a brickmaker, Medrano turned to clay sculpture in the 1960s. His vibrant, imaginative creations - typically in the Barro Betus style - often feature colorful buildings, buses, and whimsical scenes filled with animals and people. His signed or early works are especially valuable, sometimes selling for thousands of dollars.

Then there's Salvador Vásquez who works primarily in the highly burnished Barro Bruñido. His pottery features finely painted animals. He is best known for highly stylized owls and jaguars featuring geometric or floral patterns, often painted in muted tones of black, brown, and white.

Tonalá Pottery

The Pineda and Luca-no families have been instrumental in main-taining the Barro Betus tradition, producing highly colorful and imag-inative animal and reli-gious figurines that appeal to folk art collec-tors.

Guillermina and José Bernabé Aguilar are rec-ognized for their human figures and scenes of daily life. Although they reside outside Tonalá in nearby Ocotlán, their work has been an import-ant influence on the local

While a few prominent names stand out, most Tonalá pottery is pro-duced by local artists or small, family-run work-shops. Their work is usu-ally sold to tourists - either directly from their studios or in nearby street markets. Although the style has broad appeal, most artisans lack the resources or con-nections to export their work. As a result, much of the pottery remains local, sold as souvenirs or in small quantities to small galleries and deal-ers. For collectors, some of the most rewarding finds are unsigned works or pieces by little-known artists, often discovered by chance.

As is the case with so many keepsakes, Tonalá pottery often surfaces at yard sales, thrift stores, and flea markets. It's not uncommon to find tour-ist-grade pieces and even signed examples by lesser-known artists for just a dollar or two because their owners didn't real-ize or care about what they had. Plenty of these pieces also make their way online; interested buyers can find a myriad of unsigned or unknown maker cats, owls, fish, and small tableware items often for under $10.

The situation is quite different for higher-cal-iber pieces by notable ar-tists like Medrano and

Vásquez which can sell for hundreds to thou-sands of dollars, especial-ly pieces signed by the maker or having histori-cal significance. You can find pieces of that caliber at auctions, boutiques, and galleries, as well as online. A quick look at 1st dibs showed numerous signed pieces selling in the $200-$400 range. On eBay and Etsy there were examples like a vintage 1950s Candelario Medra-no 19-inch bus sculpture priced at $3,000; several vintage Salvador Vásquez vases listed around $100; and numerous Guillermina Aguilar figurines sell-ing for about $75-$100.

With those more excep-tional pieces, prices vary significantly based on typical factors like the artist, age, size, condi-tion, and intricacy of the piece. Once a piece exceeds about $75, it's wise to scrutinize it care-fully - beginning with condition. Also, be aware there are knockoffs repli-cating works by noted artists. Authentic pieces are clearly handmade and commonly bear the artist's signature. Fakes, on the other hand, are usually easy to spot due to overly uniform shapes, lack of fine detail, or use of synthetic glazes. Legit-imate dealers and folk art galleries can commonly provide information about the artist, along with supporting prove-nance - such as a certifi-cate of authenticity or a gallery receipt - which help justify higher asking prices.

Whether it's a piece worthy of a gallery or a simple decorative keep-sake, collectors unfamil-iar with Tonalá pottery might be surprised by the rich tradition and wide range of styles. Prices are still accessible, especially for unsigned or newer works, while the finest pieces by recognized ar-tists such as Medrano, Vásquez, and the Lucano family keep gaining value. For collectors ready to dive deeper, Tonalá pottery represents a promising opportunity in a market that hasn't caught up with its true artistic value.
