Souvenir spoons by Greenleaf were popular Florida keepsake

BY LARRY
LEMASTERS

Florida souvenirs have long been associated with cheap and tacky, much like “Made in Japan” used to be. Florida beaches drew millions of travelers during the tourist boom of the 1950s and ‘60s, and each of these Northern landlubbers felt obligated to return home with a red sunburn and a garish keepsake to show family and friends.

Today, many collectors seek out some of this kitschy tourist memorabilia. But one area that may not be so tacky is souvenir spoons from the golden age of Florida souvenirs (1890-1930).

The emergence of the Industrial Revolution allowed jewelers to mass-produce spoons using a die press system (the same system used to stamp coins), so by 1890, millions of tourists flooded Florida jewelry stores looking for upscale, silver spoons. One of the leaders of this spoonful of tourism was D. Greenleaf & Company (founded in 1880) when Damon Greenleaf teamed with Joseph Hayden Crosby, Jr., founding a union popularly referred to as Greenleaf and Crosby, which is still in existence today.

By 1890, Jacksonville had become the main Southern destination for Florida tourists. This Mecca-like pilgrimage to Jacksonville beaches was due in part to Henry Flagler. Enormously rich, due to Standard Oil and ownership of Florida’s East Coast Railway, Flagler envisioned Florida tourism as a dollar sign, so he built grand hotels for the rich, who could afford elegance. One of the most sought after souvenirs for these visitors was the souvenir spoon for its compactness and silvery good taste.

To accommodate his hotel guest’s desires, Flagler licensed Greenleaf and Crosby to open stores

The ‘Wabash Cannonball’ still barrels down the tracks

BY LARRY
LEMASTERS

If you are a fan or collector of American folk music, then you are probably familiar with the “Wabash Cannonball.”

Today, the tune is most famously associated with Kansas State University athletics. In 2016, ESPN named “Wabash Cannonball” the top Big 12 football pregame musical ritual. The “Wabash Cannonball” song has become a country music and marching band favorite; however, the music and song originated more than 100 years before ESPN honored it.

Everything associated with the Wabash Cannonball has a story. Here’s the story behind Kansas State appropriating the song for its athletic department. In 1968, or so the story goes, there was a fire on K-State’s campus, and Nichols Hall, K-State’s music building burnt to the ground. When the building burned, all the sheet music burned with it except for one piece of music — the Wabash Cannonball sheet music.

The reason the piece survived was a music instructor had taken the piece of sheet music home, mixed in with some other papers, without knowing it. Following the fire, Kansas State had a basketball game three days later and no sheet music for the band to read while playing. With only the Wabash Cannonball left, the band played that song all game long, over and over, and the Wabash Cannonball became an overnight tradition at K-State.

Wabash Cannonball is a 19th century American folk song that fictionally describes the operational problems of the fictional trail, the Wabash Cannonball Express. In the song, the train runs on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad. Only one actual train ever bore the name, Wabash Cannonball. Directly in response to the song's popularity, The Wabash Railroad renamed its daytime express service between Detroit and St. Louis the Wabash Cannon Ball. This service ran from 1949 until its discontinuation in 1971.

The Wabash Railroad, named for the Wabash River in Ohio and Indiana, operated throughout the mid-central United States. In 1960, Wabash operated 4,311 miles of track with a reported 6,407 million net ton-miles of revenue freight and 164 million passenger miles. The Wabash Railroad merged with the Norfolk and Western Railway in 1964, all but ending the Wabash history.

Theories, myths, and legends abound about the origin of the Wabash Cannonball. Utah Phillips, a famous American labor organizer and folk singer, told the story that hobos imagined a mythical train called the “Wabash Cannonball” which was a “death coach.” It appeared at the death of a hobo to carry his soul to its reward. Following discharge from the Army in the 1950s, Phillips was a hobo, riding the rails and writing songs, so he knew something of the beliefs and myths of hobo living.

There have been many popular versions of Wabash Cannonball sung over the years. The Carter Family was one of the first groups to record this song back in 1929; although, this recording was not released until 1932. Roy Acuff released a hugely popular recording of Wabash Cannonball in 1936, which sold over 10 million single copies. Other artists who recorded Wabash Cannonball include Johnny Cash, Boxcar Willie, and Blind Willie McTell, a Piedmont blues musician from the 1930s.

Today, if it weren't for Kansas State and a few old country music singers, Wabash Cannonball would probably be forgotten.

Still, there is a lively memorabilia market for the old Hobo train. T-shirts, pins, figurines, postcards, signs, time tables, Opryland keepsakes, and Lionel train sets make up a portion of Wabash Cannonball collectibles, but the obvious and most sought after Wabash collectibles are recordings, both 33-rpm and 45-rpm. While few of the record jackets are pretty, a couple, such as Rex Griffin's Wabash Cannon Ball from 1939, has an illustration of the Wabash Cannonball roaring down the track on the front cover.

Inkwells were once important in the quest for communication

BY BARBARA MILLER BEEM

Emails and text messages, electronic transactions and cellphone calls: These days, all it takes is a few taps on a keypad to stay in touch with friends, much less do business with strangers anywhere in the world. Devices small enough to pop into a pocket are taking the place of hands-on writing tools. And gone are the days when the only means of communication were personal, a bit cumbersome, and sometimes just plain messy.

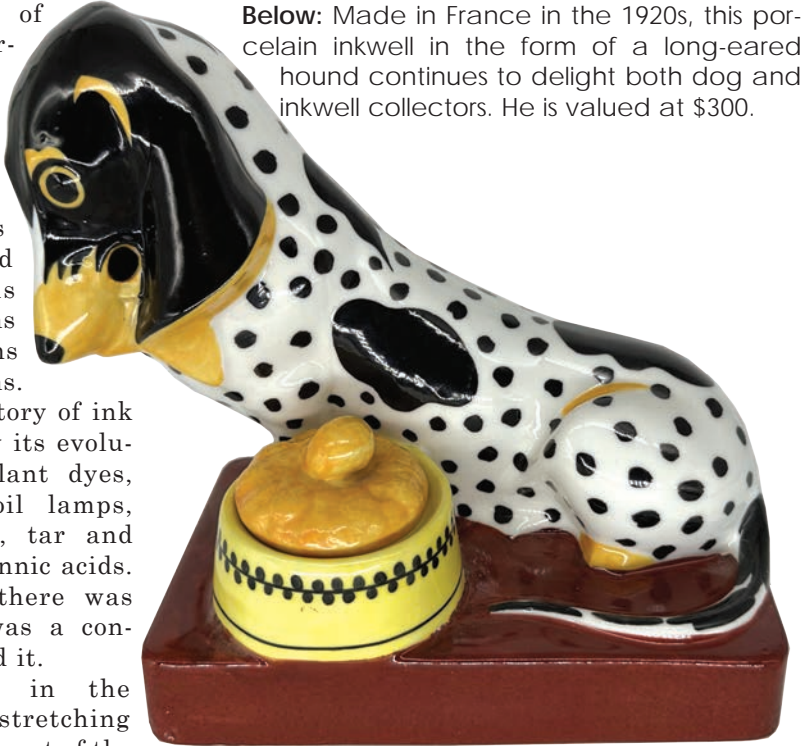

But for many collectors, there is beauty in what were once everyday tools. And to this end, the Society of Inkwell Collectors continues to provide educational support, not to mention camaraderie, to those intrigued with inkwells, essential desktop accessories from another time.

The earliest known writing systems date back thousands of years, beginning in ancient Mesopotamia, with cuneiform (impressions on wet clay tablets) and in Egypt, with stone-carved hieroglyphs. Along with the development of writing surfaces (from papyrus to parchment to paper), writing instruments advanced from stylus and reed pens to quill pens and dip pens. The long history of ink is marked by its evolution from plant dyes, soot from oil lamps, burnt bones, tar and pitch, and tannic acids. But where there was ink, there was a container to hold it.

Beginning in the 1800s and stretching into the first part of the 20th century, not only did every one know what an inkwell was, they probably had one (or more) in their home. Even children knew about inkwells, explained Bob McCormick. A longtime collector of inkwells and an active member of the Society of Inkwell Collectors (SOIC), McCormick said that with the development of the fountain pen, and later, the ballpoint pen, inkwells were no longer a

Below: Made in France in the 1920s, this porcelain inkwell in the form of a long-eared hound continues to delight both dog and inkwell collectors. He is valued at $300.

Above: Civil War soldiers often carried a writing kit such as this one to keep in touch with the folks back home. This example opens to provide a flat writing space and includes a glass-bodied inkwell with a pewter screw top.

Above: Numbered "1005," this inkwell was produced by the Art Crafts Shop of Buffalo, N.Y., and is a fine example of the wares inspired by the Arts and Crafts Movement.

Below: A full-scale realistic representation of a baseball, this inkwell was cast in metal that was gilded with ormolu. Patented on Sept. 2, 1913, it recently changed hands for $413.

Spoons

in many of Flagler's hotels, including in The Alcazar and Ponce de Leon hotels in St. Augustine. The jewelers also opened a year-round store in Jacksonville and, later, one in Bal Harbour, a part of Miami.

Greenleaf and Crosby used ideas and sketches from distributors and other jewelers, and many of the important silversmiths of the time made spoons for Greenleaf. Collectors often look for spoons that appear identical but carry the trademarks of different silversmith companies, which makes spoon collecting an enormous undertaking if you want a "complete" collection of Greenleaf spoons.

While Greenleaf purchased spoons from jewelers around the country for resale in its stores, many of the spoons and other silver articles were manufactured on the second floor of their storefront in Jacksonville. A huge die machine stamped out spoons, which were then detailed and readied for sale. Webb's Historical, Industrial & Biographical Florida called Greenleaf's operation, "well-appointed and thoroughly equipped manufactory of Florida souvenirs."

Greenleaf and Crosby worked well together since Crosby was a practical jeweler who could turn out the creative designs of Greenleaf. Many of their souvenir designs were patented and sold exclusively in Greenleaf stores, boosting their desirability.

At the height of their careers, Greenleaf and Crosby sold as many as 500 souvenir spoons a day, indicating that there are still thousands of them on the secondary market for collectors.

Alligator and Sunny South were their two best sellers and are eagerly sought after by collectors today. Johnnie Griffin, an Evening Telegram newsboy, modeled the portrait head on Sunny South.

Prominent on spoons are landmark hotels, palm trees, the Spanish Coat of Arms, historic buildings (such as the Old Watch Tower spoon), and the Old City Gate of St. Augustine. Most spoon collectors know that the year 1890 started the souvenir trade business across America, but few truly know the magnitude of this industry.

In 1890, there were only five souvenir spoons patented for production in America, but by 1891, there were hundreds of patents issued and more being processed daily. While the "souvenir spoon craze," as it was depicted in the newspapers and magazines of the time, lasted for only about 40

Right: Greenleaf & Crosby embossed its name on all of its sterling silver dinnerware, making field identification very easy. years, it has left a continuing market for collectibles, fueled by the desire of old Floridian souvenirs.

Above: Sought after Greenleaf & Crosby sterling silver St. Augustine "Alligator" souvenir spoon. This spoon is valued at $45.
