Iridescent epergne blooms with $1,000 bid at Rosie's

By Richard Junger

HOMER, Mich. – The future looked grim for 35-year-old Susanne Lötz when her Bohemian glass-maker husband Johann died in 1844.

But instead of selling his glass business so she could raise their four children, she kept it operating and even bought a competitor in the present-day Czech Republic in 1855. Operating under the name Johann Lötz Witwe, literally "Johann Lötz Widow", the Anglicized Loetz became internationally famous for its iridescent Art Nouveau glass, winning a Grand Prix along with Tiffany, Gallé, and Daum at the 1900 Paris Exposition.

A circa 1900 Art Nouveau Loetz-attributed epergne was the highlight of Rosie's Auction House's annual fall art glass auction, held in a World War II-era Quonset hut south of Marshall, Mich. Auctioneer Heidi Brown Drumhiller didn't charge a buyer's or credit card premium so bids reflected actual purchase prices.

The citron-colored epergne, with deeply ruffled, dark-edged trumpet vases mounted in an ornate gilt metal that was probably bronze, brought $1,000 in spite a minor chip to one horn.

In the late 1950s, Fenton wanted to come up with a cranberry opalescent glass that could be pressed into molds. Try as they might, the color came out a deep purple or plum instead, so they put that color into production from 1959 to 1962. A Fenton

The Old West lives on with postcard collectors

By Larry LeMasters

Most Americans know something about the American Old West, which roughly lasted from the Louisiana Purchase in 1803 until the admission of the last western states, New Mexico and Arizona, in 1912.

The term "Old West" has imprecise boundaries and varying historical definitions. Still, historians and collectors both speak about the "spirit of the Old West," and most Americans agree the spirit of the Old West is still "alive and kickin" in the history, stories, biographies, and mythology surrounding the settlement of the western states. While no one event captures all of the Old West's spirit, one event comes close — the Gunfight at the O.K. Corral.

Contrary to some of the movie depictions of this historic gunfight, the Gunfight at the O.K. Corral lasted just 30 seconds, leaving three men dead and several more wounded. No one counted, but legend has it that 30 bullets were fired in 30. As Virgil Cole once said, "Everybody could shoot."

The Gunfight at the O.K. Corral took place on Oct. 26, 1881, in Tombstone, Ariz. This gunfight pitted the Earp brothers (Virgil, Morgan, and Wyatt) along with Doc Holiday against the Cowboys (Ike and Billy Clanton, Tom and Frank McLaury, and Billy Claiborne). The Cowboys were a loose association of outlaws living in Pima and Cochise Counties in Arizona.

The Gunfight at the O.K. Corral symbolically represented many opposing, moral factions, such as good vs. evil, law vs. lawless, modernism vs. past, right vs. wrong, and Wyatt Earp vs. everybody he doesn't like. The reality is, this gunfight was probably inevitable as modern society pushed its way against a lawless frontier.

A few interesting and

No. 3761 Hobnail Plum Opalescent decanter with matching stopper and four matching wines sold for $400.

A limited-edition hand painted 1986 Fenton "Misty Morning" vase marked 60 out of 1,000 sold for the same price. Like a landscape painting wrapped around a vase, it featured trees with a lake and distant shore on a satin glass that created a foggy atmosphere. It was painted by Fenton specialist Jeanne L. Cutshaw.

A 2007 Fenton Connoisseur Collection Regal Peacock vase that borrowed on Victorian Aesthetic and Art Nouveau themes crossed the block at $310. Fenton designer Frances Burton's blue-green peacock featured extravagant iridescent plumage on Burmese glass. In turn, the Burmese created a creamy yellow base with areas above of salmon-pink blush upon reheating.

Geodes are featured rarely in glass auctions, but a geode of two Chinese-carved lizards on a gray-and-white banded Brazilian agate with a natural quartz-crystal cavity reached $210. Carved as recently as the turn of the 21st century, it joined a similar agate geode elephant carving with a druzy quartz crystal cavity that sold at $75.

Above: A Victorian Webb Jack-in-the-Pulpit reached $275. In contrast to traditional satin-finished Webb Burmese glass, this glossy piece featured clustered flowers inside the hood along with a butterfly just above the lip.

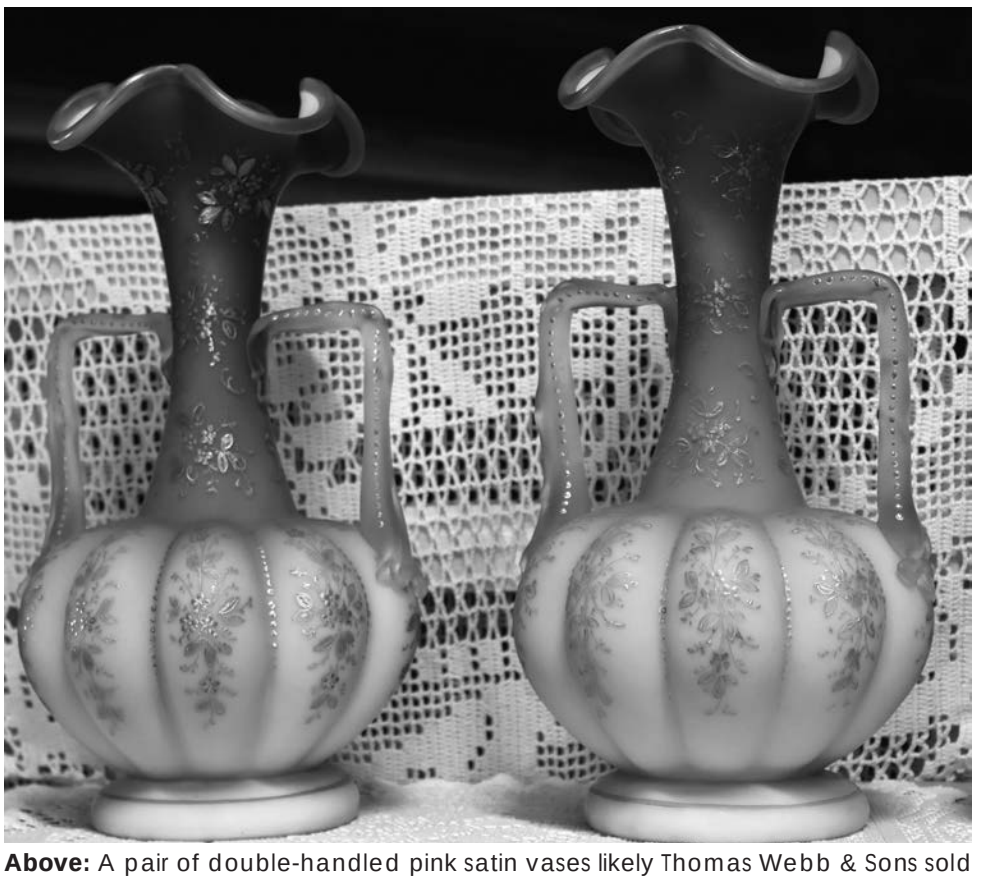

Finishing at $200 each, four pieces characterized the scope of the auction. Two circa 1890 likely Thomas Webb and Sons double-handled pink satin glass heavy vases featured applied white handles and gilt floral decoration that suggested late Victorian and the cranberry-to-pink satin glass leaned toward Above: A Fenton iridized or carnival Burmese squirrel with department code 17 price tag was auctioned at $200. While the squirrel was a standard mold, the glossy iridescent finish probably was experimental.

Webb. A No. 7300 "Log Cabin" satin custard Fenton fairy lamp dating to 1972 had uranium and a strong fluoresces. It was still wrapped in its original box. The Fenton No. 5215 iridized or carnival Burmese squirrel still had a Fenton gift shop price tag of $29.50 with a department code of 17. According to auctioneer Brown that meant it was outside of the normal squirrel production run. Instead, it could have been an experimental, prototype, or true one-on-one sample.

Most of the auction involved early 20th century art glass, but two Viking examples brought mid-century aesthetics into the proceedings. A persimmon Viking No. 6628 "Six Petal" table lighter introduced in 1966 sold for $190. Influenced by flowers, it had a broad circular foot, narrowing long stem, and six pedals around the mechanism.

Not far beyond, a Viking No. 6700 Diamond Point ruby Glimmer lamp sold for $160. Introduced in 1967, Viking's Glimmer design was influenced by traditional Victorian fairy lights originally, which were introduced in the 1880s as a way of covering open candle lights.

The career of longtime glass designer Dave Feddy spanned from the end of the West Virginia glass factory era to the modern studio-glass world, and one of his pieces created unusual interest. An amber-orange Fenton handmade vase decorated with sweeping black trails and metallic flecks and attributed to the master glassworker Fetty sold for $190.

Above: Ring assistant Hillary Bennett irradiating a glass Jack-in-the-Pulpit with a UV light to show its fluorescence Decorator Louise Piper was another name long associated with Fenton, the company's first chief decorator. A signed silver electroplated vase designed by her in 1980 sold for $180. A Piper Burmese glass basket with a pastoral wooded landscape scene with three birds in flight brought $170.

Rosie's Auction House stages two yearly art glass auctions. The next anticipated sale will be May 8, 2027. For more information email Heidi Brown Drumhiller at heidi-ann200@gmail.com

zone web

Pickup times Sun., Oct. 11 all day, Mon., Oct. 12 through Wed., Oct. 14

Extremely large estate collection online only auction featuring over 800 lots of items in this first of two auctions performed by Freeland Auction Services LLC. We appreciate the opportunity to bring this wonderful estate to market through our online absolute public auction platform on HiBid.com.

There are hundreds of highlights in this auction including the 1966 Corvette Stingray, 1965 VW Bug, 1994 Ford Lightning Pickup truck, over 200 St. Clair paperweights, Fenton glassware figurines, quality furniture, antique quilts, toys, coca-cola items, tools, John Deere Lawn tractor, Gold and Sterling Jewelry, milk bottles, Bear collectables, and so much more! We accept cash/check or credit card payments. There is a 10% buyers premium on all items (excluding the vehicles where there is a 5% buyers premium on those).

Address in Chesaning, Michigan (which is near the Twin Brooks Golf Course) will be given to winning bidders only! The pickup location is just a mile north and west of downtown Chesaning. We do ship items, however our shipping warehouse is located 30 minutes from the estate. We will need to charge a flat $5 per lot to transport them to or shipping warehouse (with a cap of $50) as well as regular shipping & handling fees. We do all our shipping in house.

Please call Barry with Freeland Auction Services at (989) 878-3308 to schedule an appointment if you would like to view the vehicles or have questions regarding the other items in the auction.

Old West

little known facts about the gunfight: First, both Ike Clanton and Billy Claiborne fled from the fight without firing a shot, proving that Ike was more mouth than hero. The three outlaws who stood their ground and fought were all killed. Second, The "O.K." stands for "Old Kindersley," and the corral was originally a small horse corral. Third, the gunfight did not take place inside the O.K. Corral. The shootout actually took place in a vacant lot next to Camillius Fly's Photography Studio on Freemont Street.

The name "Gunfight at the O.K. Corral" became a popular expression for this gunfight due to the 1957 movie The Gunfight at the O.K. Corral, starring Burt Lancaster as Wyatt Earp. Prior to this movie, the shootout was most often referred to as "the street fight in Tombstone," which lacks the flair associated with The Gunfight at the O.K. Corral, especially when Tombstone was seeking to attract tourists. Finally, The Gunfight at the O.K. Corral is widely regarded by historians as the most famous shootout in all of the Old West, indicating that from this gunfight forward, the Old West was in decline and its days were numbered.

One of the most collectable items of the Old West is postcards, especially real photo postcards. One such real photo postcard that is extremely popular with collectors is a postcard showing the bullet-riddled bodies of Billy Clanton, Tom McLaury, and Frank McLaury. Following the gunfight, these young outlaws were dressed in their finest Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes and laid out for town folks to see. In rather macabre fashion, townspeople enjoyed having their photos taken with the dead outlaws.

As the Old West was dying, circa 1912, postcards were just being created. Today, many western collectors focus their collections on postcards, and there are still a lot of Old West postcards waiting for collectors on secondary markets.

Finding O.K. Corral postcards may take some extra patience and time, but they are out there.

Above: Part of a "Famous Gunfighters" postcard series, circa 1939. This card shows Wyatt Earp and two Buntline Special pistols. This lithograph postcard is valued at $15.

Above: Postcard showing the "good guys" of O.K. Corral fame—Wyatt Earp, Doc Holliday, and others. This modern tourist postcard is valued at $2.

Collectors seek glimpse of military life in correspondence

By Kelly J. Sullivan

More than 16-million Americans left home during the 1940s to serve during World War II. American males be-tween the ages of 18 and 45 enlisted voluntarily or were drafted and sent overseas to serve at the European or Pa-cific Theater. Life changed quickly and drastically for these men – who could only pray they would make it back home.

Leaving behind families and jobs, churches and friends, the men traded the life they knew for drills and inspec-tions, mess halls and KP duty, roll calls and gear prep, four-hour nightly slumbers and 6 a.m. bugle calls. During downtime – which was given for rest and relaxation – the men often chose to write letters home.

1946 V-Mail letter and envelope. Courtesy of anonymous collector.

The U.S. military and organizations such as the Red Cross supplied the GIs with field writing kits – canvas folders containing lightweight lined paper and postcards, a pen or pencil, and envelopes. Writing tablets and implements were sold at military posts.

Mail call was sporadic for those serving in the military during World War II. It might be daily for a period of time, and then not again for several weeks. Through the years of the battle, billions of letters crisscrossed the oceans, maintaining a vital connection between men and home. They often asked about the wellbeing of friends and fam-ily members, reminisced about happy memories, and expressed their hankering for home-cooked food. Those with artistic ability used ink or watercolors to illustrate their writing paper or envelopes with scenes of military life, which were often humorous. The Library of Congress Veteran's History Project hosts an online showcase called The Art of Correspondence, displaying the envelope art of World War II. The brilliantly colorful showcase in-cludes the creative work of Robert K. Bindig, who had been employed as an advertising agency artist prior to en-listing in the Army, for which he served from 1943 to 1946.

Collectors of Military Life

Those who didn't feel they had the artistry to turn their letters or envelopes into a canvas, could purchase boxes of illustrated postcards to write on. Most took a comic slant, such as "Camp Laff-Cards," manufactured in Chica-go. The brightly colored cards came in a folder of seven, each able to be torn off at a perforated line. The cards were advertised as being "on the funny side of camp life."

U.S. Army Victory postcards manufactured by Buddy Postals were simple in comparison, with a large red "V" on their face, but they came in boxes of 50 so lasted longer. Stationary stamped with a specific military branch could also be purchased, along with commercial postcards illustrating patriotic sentiments.

All letters mailed by members of the military were opened and read by government censors. This was to ensure that no outgoing mail contained information – such as locations or operational details – which could fall into en-emy hands. Any words, sentences or paragraphs the censors found to be inappropriate, were physically cut from the letter using scissors.

In an effort to speed up mail delivery and create more room on cargo ships, Victory Mail – typically referred to as V-Mail – was launched in the summer of 1942. This process allowed GI's letters to be written on standardized forms and then photographed onto a tiny reel of microfilm. The reels would be mailed out and the letters printed at whatever post offices were closest to the intended recipients. A 100-foot roll of microfilm could hold the imag-es of approximately 1,600 letters. Despite convenience, the blurry representation of someone's beloved son, fa-ther, husband or brother away fighting a war, made the correspondence feel much less personal.

The adoption of V-Mail changed the censorship process. Because letters with big chunks of conversation cut from them tended to get caught up in the microfilm machine, the censors began simply blacking out inappropriate words or comments instead of physically removing them.

Prisoners of war were provided with standardized postcards and stationery from the POW camp administration. The Geneva Convention of 1929 had previously set the requirement that detainees must be allowed the right of written communication. The prisoners were therefore allowed to keep in touch with their families back home, who were undoubtedly terrified by the idea of their loved one having been captured by the enemy.

Throughout the war, the Pepsi Cola Company hosted service centers at which a GI could step into a small booth and record Voice-O-Grams on 6 ½ inch recorded discs. Envelopes which were stamped "This is a recorded message from your man in the service," the disc could then be sent home to the GI's family.

"Military mail is more than normal mail," said Jonathan Bay who runs his online store Adler Militaria out of Ok-lahoma. "Usually it's got a story behind it and that story can quickly be deconstructed from the envelope first."

A widely recognized expert in German military identification documents and a dealer in rare historical military artifacts, Bay maintains an impressive array of artifacts from World War II and the Third Reich era. "Although the contents of many wartime letters will not contain juicy combat information due to wartime censorship, some of the most fascinating mail is in fact sent home from POWs," said Bay. "These are censored, checked for secret mes-sages, and usually have an array of stamps."

To peruse Adler Militaria – which caters to researchers, museums and collectors with its ever-changing array of ar-tifacts such as photographs and dog tags, uniforms and lapel insignia – visit https://adlermilitaria.com

War correspondence is more likely to be located through shops that deal solely in military items. Flea markets and auctions may occasionally turn up letters or collections of letters written during World War II. Depending on con-tent, a single letter can be purchased for as little as a dollar. A collection containing hundreds of letters can go for thousands of dollars. A single letter from a prisoner of war is typically valued at around $1,000.

An unused V-Mail form, as well as an unused POW postcard, can be had for around $5, while an unused military envelope with factory-produced graphics typically sells for under $15. Books of military postal cards can be found for under $50 and sets of unused military stationary for under $75, although some stationary with rare graphics can go for $100 per page.

Military mail – whether it contains the details of a concentration camp being liberated, or the pining of a young man for his mother's home-cooked breakfasts – make up some of our country's most valuable history. It's a reflec-tion of bravery personified, a picture of fortitude put into words.
